What She Was Good For.

A dreadful story comes from the north of England by way of London Answers.

An old Yorkshire collier, well known for his success in the coursing-field, recently surprised his mates by marrying an unprepossessing pauper woman. He had been reckoned a confirmed hater of the other sex.

"Why has ta gone and got spliced, lad, at thy age?" one of his friends asked him.

"Oh, that's not much of a tale," answered the old man, stolidly. "I agree wi' ye 'at Betsy yonder is no beauty—if she had been I shouldn't have wed her. But that there dog o' mine, he was simply pinin' for somebody to look after him while I was away at t' pit. I couldn't bear to leave him in the house by hissen, so I hit on the idea o' marrying' Betsy. She's not handsome, but she's mighty good company for the dog!"

Not So Funny.

In a Pullman car on an English railway recently, says an exchange, a waggish young man, noticing an elderly gentleman trying to put on a light dust-coat, went to his assistance. While thus engaged, the young man observed a good-sized whisky flask protruding from one of the old gentleman's pockets, and thought it a good opportunity for a joke. Having helped the stranger on with his coat, therefore, he pulled out the flask and said:

"Will you take a drink?"

The old man did not recognize the bottle, and drawing himself up, remarked rather severely:

"No, sir; I never drink."

"It won't hurt you," insisted the wag; "it's the best."

"Young man," said the old gentleman, speaking loud enough for all in the carriage to hear, "if you persist in drinking whisky you will be a ruined man at 40. It is the curse of the land. When I was a boy my mother died, and the last thing she did was to call me to her bedside, and say, 'John, promise me that you will never touch a drop of liquor.'"

"Oh, well, in that case," said the joker, "I must drink it myself," whereupon, suiting the action to the words, he pulled out the cork and took a good drink. A moment later he dropped the bottle with an exclamation which certainly didn't sound like a blessing, and yelled, "Ugh! ugh! My mouth's all raw."

Then it was that the old gentleman discovered his loss, and to the amusement of the other passengers said:

"Ah, young man, you will be careful before you take another man's property again. I am Doctor ——, and that bottle contained some quinine and iron for one of my patients."

The young man got out at the next station.

MONTHS ON A CORAL ISLAND.

Adventures of the Crew of the Norwegian Bark Seladon.

Second Mate Oleson, of the Norwegian bark Seladon, Capt. Jaeger, from New Castle, N. S. W., on July 13, 1896, for Honolulu, which was wrecked in the South Seas in August, 1896, has arrived in London with a dozen of the survivors, and tells a terrible story of their experience.

The Seladon struck the reefs off Starbuck Island Aug. 7. The crew was obliged to take to the boats, and the vessel filled so rapidly that there was no time to save clothing. They barely got a few provisions, the ship's compass, and chart, and forgot the sextant.

Eight men manned each of the two boats and made for Malden Island, as there was no refuge at Starbuck Island. Failing to find Malden Island, they tried to find Christmas Island. After eleven days the first mate's boat was capsized and the mate drowned. The survivors entered the other boat, which was already disabled, and drifted, dangerously overloaded. The heat of the sun peeled their faces and bodies; their lips blackened and swelled from want of food and water. The only food they had, in addition to the small quantity of provisions which carried from the vessel, was a few small flying fish.

Finally the captain and the carpenter became sick. Still there was no glimpse of Christmas Island. Then they tried a course they thought perhaps would bring them to Samoa or the Fiji Islands. Finally Capt. Jaeger died. After twenty-three days, when food and water were exhausted, they caught a little rain.

The party drifted without food for six days and finally, on Sept. 6, they were cast on a coral island and their boat was smashed by a big wave. The island upon which they were thrown proved to be Sofia Island, inhabited by ten people, and belonging to an American subject living in Samoa. They lived there for ten months on turtles, birds and bananas. The carpenter died soon after they landed.

A few steamers passed the island and they tried to attract their attention by the waving of signals, but failed. Finally they put off in a small boat and hailed a steamer which took them to Sava, and from that place they traveled to Sydney.

Stranger than Fiction.

The Gentleman gives currency to a remarkable but well-authenticated story which shows—what most people are supposed to know already—that truth is stranger than fiction.

Some years ago the cashier of a Liverpool merchant received a Bank of England note, which he held up to the light to make sure it was genuine. In so doing he noticed some very indistinct red marks, as if words had been traced on the front of the note and on the margin, and out of curiosity he tried to decipher them. At length he made out the following sentence:

"If this note should fall into the hands of John Dean of Longhihmar, he will learn thereby that his brother is languishing a prisoner in Algiers."

Mr. Dean, on being shown the note lost no time in asking the Government for assistance, and finally secured the freedom of his brother, on payment of a ransom to the Bey. The unfortunate man had been a prisoner for eleven years, and had traced, with a piece of wood for pen and his own blood for ink the message on the banknote, in the hope of its being seen sooner or later.

Athletics in Japanese Schools.

Athletics hold an important position in the schools of Japan. Once a year there is a gathering of all the students in a district to engage in athletic contests. At one of these festivals 6,000 boys and girls from all the schools within a distance of twenty-five miles were entered to take part. A circular race track, roomy enough for any army allowed four different kinds of games to be performed at the same time.

Simple Method to Test Water.

To test the purity of water there has been found no better or simpler way than to fill a clean bottle three-fourths full of the water to be tested and dissolve in it half a teaspoonful of the purest sugar—loaf or granulated will answer; cork the bottle and place it in a warm position for two days. If in twenty-four or forty-eight hours the water becomes cloudy or milky, it is unfit for domestic use.

MAN'S NEW SERVANT.

STARTLING OFFICE FOR THE MAGNET.

Edison's Immense Plant for Separating the Metal from the Quarts by Means of Electro-Magnetic Attraction Is Now in Operation.

Edison's Latest Triumph.

This century has produced a host of thinkers whose penentration of intellect, keen observation and careful reasoning have chained the forces of nature and made them the servants of man. Of these there is probably none more deserving of the highest place than is Thomas A. Edison. He has made more than a score of inventions, any one of which would entitle him to a name and a place among the foremost men in the scientific world, and yet he goes on and strives for more and greater conquests. The marvelous inventions with which his name is associated have not been achieved in a day, but are the result of patient toil, indomitable perseverance and concentration of purpose. Nothing he has done heretofore has required so much of his individual attention, taxed his inventive ingenuity so fully, or in the aggregate consumed his vital powers more than his latest accomplishment.

Billions of tons of iron ore lie scattered through the rocks of the eastern spurs of the Allegheny Mountains. But the ore is mixed with the rock in such fine particles that it could not be mined with the ordinary methods, and was therefore looked upon as one of the wastes of nature. The furnaces in the East were compelled to look for their supply of high-grade ore to a few isolated deposits and to ores imported from foreign countries. The former being limited, and the cost of procuring the latter having almost reached the prohibitory point, the trade in high-grade ore for the manufacture of Bessemer steel began to shift westward to Michigan and Minnesota. Iron mills in the East were shut down and many thousands who depend on the smelting industry for a living were thrown out of employment. Walking along the Long Island shore Edison one day noticed a pile of black sand. He took some of it home for investigation. Placing an electro-magnet near the mass, he was surprised to see little dark grains leave the heap and move like so many ants toward the magnet; the ants proved to be little grains of iron ore. On the basis of this find he evolved his famous ore-separating machine. When the above-mentioned curious condition of the iron trade in the East was brought to Mr. Edison's attention eight years ago he remembered his experience with the sand, and in order to assure himself of the exact condition of the iron mines in the East he invented a magnetic needle which would "dip" toward the earth whenever it was brought over a large deposit of iron. With this he made a tour of the mines of New Jersey. To his amazement his needle indicated that the greater portion of the ground over which he traveled was underlaid with immense deposits of iron.

With his magnetic needle, or, as he calls it, his "magnetic eye," he tested every large body of gneiss rock extending along the eastern coast of the United States, from Lower Canada to the great Smoky Mountains of North Carolina.

He found immense deposits of iron. For instance, in the 3,000 acres immediately surrounding the village of Edison, there are over 200,000,000 tons of low-grade ore. In the entire district there are 16,000 acres in which the deposit is proportionately as large. The world's annual output of iron ore does not, at the present time, reach 60,000,000 tons; so that in the paltry two miles surrounding the village of Edison there is enough iron in the rocks to keep the whole world supplied for one year or the United States for three years, even with the natural increase in demand. Sixteen thousand acres or twenty-five square miles of land contain enough iron ore to keep the whole world supplied for seventeen years, allowing, of course, for all natural increase of demand, due to the needs of a growing population. These acres would more than supply the United States with iron, including necessary exports, for the next seventy years; and they contain more than has been mined heretofore in this country since its discovery.

Here was an opportunity for the inventor and he set to work to plan out a great industry. It has taken him eight years to do it, but the result has justified all the trouble and money which he has expended upon it. Engineers used to large enterprises of the kind have smiled incredulously. Some of them have spoken of it as Edison's hobby, and others as his folly. Some have shown him on paper that no machine could be constructed powerful enough to crush five, six and seven ton rocks, or if such a machine were constructed it would never stand the jar and strain exerted upon it. This particular difficulty Mr. Edison surmounted so completely that less than 100-horse power is required to reduce rocks weighing six and seven tons to dust in three seconds from the time they are thrown into the crushing machine. He is crushing rocks and dropping the resulting powder past powerful electro-magnets. The sand is not attracted by the magnetism but passes straight on, the iron ore is attracted to one side and falls in a heap of its own. This is the whole principle; yet in the actual working out it becomes one of the most tremendous processes in the world. It is, after all, no small matter to crush the very vitals out of a mountain and then extract all of the ore from the millions of tons of sand.

This is not all a theory which Mr. Edison has evolved and left to someone else to put to practical use. In the village of Edison, N. J., he has established a smelting plant on the principle of his invention that is a practical demonstration of the feasibility of his theory. The methods by which the ore is extracted are all unlike any other, and all are the product of his inventive genius. The ore-bearing rock is blasted into bowlders and then laid on flat cars with a steam shovel. It is then conveyed to the crushing plant. The cars are run in under each end of the crushing mill. The trays containing the rock are lifted by the cranes to the second story of the mill, where the rock is dumped into a large square pit. Ten feet below the edge of the pit revolve immense iron rollers weighing 100 tons.

The surface of these rollers is studded with teeth, and the space between them is less than a foot wide. Nevertheless a six-ton rock dropped into the pit passes between the rolls in less than three seconds. Far down beneath these rolls is another set of smaller size, but nearer together. From the heavy rolls above the rock falls into this lower set and is crushed still smaller. It has now been reduced to pieces the size of a man's fist, and from the lower set of rolls drops into an elevator or endless conveyor which carries the pieces up to the top of another part of the building and dumps them into a shaft leading down to three more sets of rolls set directly beneath one another. As the rock passes through these rolls the latter are found to be placed nearer and nearer together until with the last or third set the two rolls composing it are set tightly against each other, so that when the rock ultimately passes through it has been reduced to dust.

After the crushing process it is carried to the top of the magnet house and dumped into space to find its way through many sieves of varying meshes and past many magnet faces of varying strength. As it descends the ore is drawn by the magnet into a long pipe by itself while the sand falls to the ground. The value of the sand alone is no small consideration. It is sold to builders and contractors at a good price, being more suitable for their purposes than any other obtainable. The pure ore is now allowed to drop downward and pass through a room where blowers rid it of any dust that may have accompanied it on its travel. After leaving the blower room, it is really a stream of pure, finely-divided iron ore, which drops into conveyors and is carried to a storehouse, which holds 5,000 tons. Here it may rest temporarily or it may pass on by means of other conveyors to the mixing house. It cannot be smelted in the form of iron dust. It must be made into briquettes, and in order to do this it must be mixed with some adhesive substance which will prevent it from disintegrating when brought under the action of the furnace. To make this substance Mr. Edison had to perform 6,600 experiments before he got it of such a consistency as to be satisfactory. Thus in small plastic nuggets the ore drops into the bricking machine and comes out in small blocks which are thrown on conveyors to be carried to the great ovens to be baked. On coming out of the ovens it is ready for shipment. Fast freight cars are at hand to haul it away to the furnaces.

From the time the ore is blasted with its native rock out of the mountainside until it is loaded in the form of commercially pure iron briquettes on the cars it is not touched by human hands. The never-ending and never-resting stream of material constantly circulates through the various buildings, crushed by the stored momentum of gigantic rolls, hoisted skyward by steam, pulled earthward by gravity, deflected by magnetism, dried, sifted, weighed, gauged, conveyed, changed from rock into dust, and from dust into comprehensive lumps, mixed with a due proportion of adhesive material; churned, baked, counted, and sent flying to the furnaces by fast freight; and not once in its course is it arrested or jogged onward by human agency.

The pockets of ore from which the United States has drawn its chief supply are rapidly becoming exhausted. There is, it must be understood, plenty of iron ore in the country, but it is not the kind of ore from which steel can be made. Steel can only be made from ores in which the per cent. of phosphorus is very small. Edison with his crushing process has entirely eliminated the phosphorus element from the ore. It therefore remains inevitable that this must ultimately become the only serious method of producing ores from which steel will be made. It would seem from the prospect that Edison will become the head of a vast industry, as great as that brought into existence by the invention of the incandescent light, and in a measure more imposing, as it embraces the production of what in commercial circles is after all the most valuable metal on earth. In spite of this, however, the man who planned it all does not from his demeanor appear to have been over-impressed with its importance.

Arrested a Whole Funeral.

It has long been the custom of funerals the world over to proceed slowly; not so, however, with funerals in the outskirts of Brooklyn. The other day in that city a funeral was spinning along when the hearse driver carelessly ran over a boy's bicycle and ruined it.

The policeman, who gave chase, overhauled the hearse, climbed up on the box and arrested the driver for his recklessness.

"All you people follow me!" the policeman shouted to the drivers of the carriages in the funeral cortege.

Thereupon he turned the horses toward the police station and started them at a trot. The hearse driver was dumb with astonishment. All the carriages dutifully trundled along behind. Imagine the astonishment of the citizens of Brooklyn upon seeing a whole funeral procession trotting toward the lockup. The unhappy occupants of the carriages, knowing nothing of the reason for the change in their itinerary, were full of indignation.

The sergeant refused to entertain the charge against the hearse driver, and he advised the boy to get a warrant for the driver if he wished to prosecute him. Thereupon the funeral procession resumed its journey toward the cemetery.

A Great Authority on Evolution.

There is a sketch of "A Great Naturalist," the late Edward Drinker Cope, in the Century. It is written by Henry Fairfield Osborn. Prof. Osborn says His pioneer exploration came early in the age of Darwinism, when missing links, not only in the human ancestry, but in the greater chain of backboned animals, were at the highest premium. Thus he was fortunate in recording the discovery in northwestern New Mexico of by far the oldest quadrupeds known, in finding among these the most venerable monkey, in describing to the world hundreds of links—in fact, whole chains—of descent between the most ancient quadrupeds and what we please to call the higher types, especially the horses, camels, tapirs, dogs and cats. He labored successfully to connect the reptiles with the amphibians, and the latter with the fishes, and was as quick as a flash to detect in the paper of another author the oversight of some long-sought link which he had been awaiting. Thus in losing him we have lost our ablest and most discerning critic. No one has made such profuse and overwhelming demonstration of the actual historical working of the laws of evolution, his popular reputation perhaps resting most widely upon his practical and speculative studies in evolution.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

United States Commissioner of Education Recommends Better Grading of Pupils—Practical Journalism In Schools—Educational Notes.

Better Grading Needed.

At the National Educational Association meeting recently held at Milwaukee, Dr. Wm. T. Harris, United States Commissioner of Education, pleaded for a better grading of pupils in the public schools, claiming that the classifications are seldom as accurate as they should be. "Bright, active, well-advanced pupils are herded with dull, slow, less well-advanced pupils. After three or four months it is found that the dull ones are holding the brighter ones back and the brighter ones are hurrying the slow ones forward at a pace which prevents real comprehension of what is passed over."

The School Newspaper.

Did you ever try it? Then start now. It is brought out by the school weekly or monthly, as is seen fit. All the school act as reporters, and collect items. Some write little stories and essays, but the main thing is "school news." The editor's notes: "John Smith read a fine composition on 'Courage' last Friday, and was complimented by Mr. Jones, our teacher." There should be items about good conduct—this will stimulate. We cannot go on to enumerate. Will some teacher try one or more of these plans? Let us hear of your success. The teacher will be gratified to find some school-home made brighter by its efforts.—Canadian Teacher.

Civil Government in Primary Schools.

About the time that the child goes to school he begins to take lessons in civil government. This also is developed on the basis of his previous home-training. It begins at the very door step. The letter carrier, the policeman, the justice of the peace, and the postmaster introduce him to the government of the outer world. Some or all of these officers he sees and knows, and others he hears about. The very mail wagon that rattles along the street teaches its lesson, and so do other symbols of authority that confront him.—B. A. Hinsdale.

Items of Interest.

The University of the City of New York has enrolled for the new year, in all departments, 1,300 students.

Fourteen hundred students have been admitted and 650 are waiting for admittance at Cooper Union, New York.

The University of Illinois has 1,600 students. In 1893-'94 it had 743. The new school of law opened with twenty-five students.

Lawrence University is to have a new science hall, $22,000 having been contributed for this purpose. This building will cost $25,000, and the apparatus $15,000 more.

Dr. Henry Preserved Smith, who was formerly professor at Lane Theological Seminary, has been recently appointed to the chair of Biblical interpretation at Amherst.

The will of the late C. T. Wilder, of Wellesley, Mass., leaves $10,000 each to the American Board, American Missionary Association, Roberts College at Constantinople, the School for Girls at the same city, Whitman College, Carleton College, and the Mount Hermon School at Northfield, Mass. Dartmouth College receives $75,000 and Amherst College $15,000.

At Pittsburg, Pa., a movement is said to be on foot to have placed in every public school swimming pools and a complete bathing equipment. The idea is to have the swimming pools placed in the spacious basements of the school buildings and have the children take a bath every time the teachers or the principals deem it necessary.

A Curious Oil.

It has been found that the oil bursting out of the bed of the creek near Campton, says the Courier-Journal, contains a very valuable quality hitherto unknown. By laying a plank or anything across the creek a person can dam the oil up and gather any amount of it, and it has been discovered that the oil will burn as fast as dry paper. The people, through curiosity, go to this oil-spring, dam it up on the top of the water, and then strike a match to it in order to see spread over the whole surface of the water a perfect blaze. This oil for lubricating purposes is hard to surpass, and the beauty of it rests in the fact that it does not have to undergo any process whatever to be valuable for such purpose.

The Lightest Known Solid.

The lightest known solid is said to be the pith of the sunflower, with a specific gravity of .028, or about one-eighth that of cork. The sunflower is extensively cultivated in Central Russia, and various uses are served by its different parts, the recent discovery of the lightness of the pith essentially increasing the commercial value of the plant. For life-saving appliances at sea, cork has a buoyancy of one to five, while with the sunflower pith one to thirty-five is attained. About 800 cubic inches of it would weigh as much as one cubic inch of iridium, the heaviest metal.

Somethin Appropriate.

The Washingto Star does not give a detailed description of the old man's mule, nor is it necessary.

"I reckon," said the old colored man, "dat I better change de name o' dat mule."

"It doesn't make much diffreences what you call a mule, does it?"

"No. But I likes ter hab it somethin' propriate. Did you eber heah tell 'bout sukumstances ober which you hab no control?"

"Yes."

"Well, dat's what I'se gwinter call him, 'Sukumstances.'"

Rev. Dr. Parkhurst says in a recent letter to a friend in New York: "I cannot stand by the Sunday saloon pure and simple, but I do believe in allowing the sale of beer and light wines on Sunday, provided they are the accompaniment of an honest meal, honestly paid for."

AN UNKNOWN ROOM.

Sealed Up for Years in New York's Court House.

A room the existence of which was known to few, if any, present office holders, was discovered last week in the southeast corner, under the office of the Surrogate's clerks. It was tightly fastened, and, it is said, has not been opened for twelve to fifteen years. No one in the building had any control over the room or its contents, but on inquiry it was found that the room had been taken years ago for the deposit of records of the Comptroller's office. The inquiry was pursued until a key to the room was found filed away in the office of the Comptroller and the room was opened.

The dead air inside nearly knocked over the curious men who looked in, and the door was quickly shut up again. The hasty glance taken of the interior showed that it contained a lot of books and bundles of vouchers and such papers. It was the unwholesome odor that hung about the Surrogate's office, where nine clerks are employed in a small room, that led to the search which resulted in the discovery of the sealed apartment. It is thought that some of the waste pipes have sprung a leak in the room.

It is understood that this secret room is the only part of the building retained for the Comptroller after an effort on his part several years ago to secure quarters in the County Courthouse. The difficulty, as explained to the writer by Justice Van Brunt some time ago, arose through Comptroller Andrew H. Green insisting that he had the right to take possession of quarters in the County Court House under authority of the Commissioner of Public Works, in whose charge are the municipal buildings. The Comptroller was partly installed before the Justices of the Supreme Court got into action. He wanted the lower floor on the west side of the building, chiefly the part now used as docket clerks' rooms.

"We told him," said the Justice, "that the State had subscribed something like $200,000 for the building, and that the State would have something to say as to how the building was used. Mr. Green was told that he would be brought before us for contempt if he did not vacate, and he vacated."

The room now appears to show that the Judges were contemned just a little.—New York Sun.

GREAT EVEN IN DEATH.

Mask of Napoleon Sold in This Country for a Fabulous Sum.

The amount of attention being bestowed upon Nelson this anniversary has drawn attention to the other great N, Napoleon, who is being biographed in a readable way under the title "The Great Adventurer" in the English Illustrated Magazine.

NAPOLEON'S DEATH MASK.

A short time ago Mr. Graves of Pall Mall, London, in some manner got hold of a cast of the death mask of Napoleon. This extremely valuable possession he sent at once to this country, where he immediately found an eager buyer at a fabulous sum. Mr. Graves did not even offer the cast for sale in England, preferring to reap a harvest in the United States, where the Napoleon cult has many followers.

Homes for Themselves.

One of the best possible facts in the latter-day progress of this country is the increase in the number of homes. In crowded centers of population, such as New York and one or two other cities, the flat and the hotel must always be necessary, for space is too valuable to be monopolized by the humble. But even around the very large cities there are being built thousands and thousands of suburban cottages and country residences, and all through the length and breadth of the country, in the towns, villages and cities, artistic homes are increasing at an astonishing rate. If anyone will take the trouble to look up the literature on the subject he will find that in this country there are more than a hundred papers devoted to these home-builders, giving them each week plans and suggestions. The number of books upon low-priced architecture written in the past fifteen years, exceeds the total for a century previous. A wider education is being spread, and the gain in every way is enormous.

A man who owns his home is a better citizen, even if there is a mortgage on it. There is a feeling of personal partnership in the protection of property and the preservation of public order which makes him stand for what is best in law and government. It is the best possible thing for his wife and children; best for him and best for the country.

"Chapel of the Seas."

The most wonderful cave in the world is in the island of Tonga, in the South Pacific. Byron called it "a chapel of the seas." It is formed in a rock that is almost surrounded by the ocean. This rock is about sixty feet high, and broad proportionately.

Many years ago a boy, the son of a native chief, was chasing a huge turtle, when his game seemed to sink into the rock. The lad watched and waited until the tide fell, disclosing a small opening in the rock about six feet under low water mark.

Diving boldly, the young hunter entered the aperture, and, to his surprise, came to the surface inside the rock. The rock was hollow, and its interior was found afterward, when the natives explored it with torches, to contain many beautiful stalactites.

When attacked and followed by enemies the natives, who knew the secret, leave their canoes, plunge into the water, and disappear. Their foes linger, astonished at their disappearance, for no person not acquainted with it would suspect that the rock was hollow.

Try Grain-O! Try Grain-O!

Ask your grocer to-day to show you a package of GRAIN-O, the new food-drink that takes the place of coffee. The children may drink it without injury as well as the adult. All who try it, like it. GRAIN-O has that rich seal brown of Mocha or Java, but it is made from pure grains, and the most delicate stomach receives it without distress. ¼ the price of coffee. 15c. and 25c. per package. Sold by all grocers.

English in Paris.

Apropos of the exhibition, and of the thousands of English-speaking people who will visit Paris in 1900, a very enterprising step has just been taken by the proprietors of the "Magasins due Louvre," the "Whiteley's of Paris. They are going to teach English to their employes. A series of classes has been arranged, and a number of the young men and women who serve at the counters will have the opportunity of learning the English language free of charge. The administration itself is going to pay the professors, who are all Englishmen. This scheme will enable English-speaking customers to be served more agreeably, and will render, too, the assistance of the hateful interpreter unnecessary. — London Sketch.

A Boy Sucks a Tintype and Dies.

A New York boy, Walter Walters, got hold of a tintype the other day and put it in his mouth. He sucked it for ten or fifteen minutes, and next day was taken seriously ill. Erysipelas set in and the boy died. The doctor said the solution of mercury and cyanide of potassium used to develop the tintype poisoned the boy's blood and caused his death.

ESCAPED A DREADFUL DEATH.

Adventure of William H. Hill in the Yellowstone Grand Canyon.

William H. Hill, of Osawatomie, Kas., had an adventure in the Grand canyon of the Yellowstone which deserves to take high rank in the annals of narrow escapes. He had descended the canyon to Red Rock, below Point Lookout. He was still 1,500 feet above the bottom of the great chasm. Below him an almost precipitous slope ran down hundreds of feet to the top of an absolutely perpendicular wall about twice as high as the Masonic Temple.

Mr. Hill lost his footing and plunged downward along the steep slope. He knew what was below him. The speed with which he approached destruction was rapidly accelerating and a growing avalanche was accompanying him. With a desperate effort he flung himself upon his back and dug his heels and elbows into the earth. It seemed to him that he slid for miles, but he was not going as fast as at the beginning. Stones that he had started raced on ahead of him; he dug his heels and elbows in harder. And at last he stopped with something that felt like solid rock under his feet.

ON THE VERGE OF A PRECIPICE.

For some minutes he lay perfectly still, not daring to move. Then slowly he raised his head.

He was on the brink of the precipice, 600 feet high. The little ledge under his feet was actually projecting over the edge.

A rescue party, almost an hour later, found him sitting there. He was practically unhurt.

Fined Under an Old Law.

The publisher of the London Figaro was recently fined £5 and costs as being "a rogue and a vagabond," in the terms of a law passed in the reign of George the Fourth, which provides that if any person shall publish any lottery scheme he shall be punishable as therein provided. An advertisement of certain "headache powders" had appeared in the Figaro, under the heading "£20 Missing Word Competition." A description of the powders was given, with the omission of two words needed to perfect the sense. Six persons guessed the words omitted, and the prize was duly divided among them. The legal proceedings have given a substantial advertisement to the powders, at the expense of the Figaro.

A Big Regular Army.

The mightiest host of this sort is the army of invalids whose bowels, liver and stomachs have been regulated by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. A regular habit of body is brought about through using the Bitters, not by violently agitating and griping the intestines, but by re-enforcing their energy and causing a flow of the bile into its proper channel. Malaria, la grippe, dyspepsia, and a tendency to inactivity of the kidneys, are conquered by the Bitters.

Judge—You admit that you entered the house of the prosecuting witness by the rear door at 2 in the morning?

Prisoner—Yes, your Honor.

Judge—What business did you have there at that time of night?

Prisoner—I thought it was my own house.

Judge—Then why did you, when this lady approached, leap throug the window, jump into the cistern and hide yourself?

Prisoner—Your Honor, I thought it was my wife.—Truth.

The Duograph.

The "duograph" is a new device that has been brought out in Paris for enabling direct correspondence between blind persons and those who can see. It is a kind of typewriter, which prints the letters in relief, so that they are both visible to the eye and sensible to the touch.

WHAT MAN DOES NOT LOVE BEAUTY?

Mrs. Pinkham Counsels Young Wives to Keeep Their Attractiveness. A Letter From a Young Wife.

Seven-eighths of the men in this world marry a woman because she is beautiful in their eyes.

What a disappointment then to see the fair young wife's beauty fading away before a year passes over her head!

I feel as if I would like to say to every young woman who is about to be married—"Strengthen yourself in advance, so that you will not break down under the new strain on your powers." Keep your beauty, it is a precious possession! Your husband loves your beauty, he is proud to be seen in public with you; try to keep it for his sake, and your own.

The pale cheeks, the dark shadows under the eyes, the general drooping of the young wife's form, what do they mean? They mean that her nerves are failing, that her strength is going and that something must be done to help her through the coming trials of maternity.

Build her up at once by a course of some tonic with specific powers. Such as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. You can get it at any druggist's.

Following we publish by request a letter from a young wife—of her own accord she addresses it to her "suffering sisters," and while from modesty she asks to withhold her name, she gives her initials and street number in Chambersburg, Pa., so she can easily be found personally or by letter:

To my Suffering Sisters:—Let me write this for your benefit, telling you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I am but nineteen and suffered with painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, dizziness, burning sensation back of ears and on top of my head, nervousness, pain and soreness of muscles, bearing-down pains, could not sleep well, was unable to stand without pain, and oh! how I longed to be well!

One day I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham telling her all, knowing I could do so in perfect confidence.

She wrote me a lovely letter in reply, telling me exactly what to do. After taking nine bottles of the Compound, one box of Liver pills, and using one-half package of Sanative wash, I can say I am cured. I am so happy, and owe my happiness to none other than Mrs. Pinkham.

Why will women suffer when help is near? Let me, as one who has had some experience, urge all suffering women, especially young wives, to seek Mrs. Pinkham's advice.—Mrs. R. S. R., 113 E. Catherine St., Chambersburg, Pa.

WOMAN'S REALM

FOR THE COMPLEXION.

The best methods of enhancing the charms nature has bestowed are so simple that any one may employ them. We cannot always look like girls of sixteen or eighteen summers, but there are many matrons of thirty-five who look fully ten years older, because they have not taken the proper care of themselves. A morning bath in water cool enough to be invigorating but not cold enough to chill the body is not only necessary for cleanliness, but is a great beautifier also. This is quickly accomplished by wringing a towel out of cold water and going over the body as rapidly as possible. Then rub with a dry towel until the flesh is all in a glow.

Eat plain, wholesome food, avoiding pastry or cake, fat meat, and rich preserves. Exercise freely in the open air. A brisk walk one hour every day is necessary for those whose duties keep them closely confined the remainder of the time. Wash the face morning and night with good soap and hot water, rinse in clear water and dry with a soft towel. At night apply a mixture composed of equal parts of glycerine and rose water, rubbing it well into the skin. If the face is tanned from exposure to the wind a little lemon juice added to this lotion will whiten it, and is perfectly harmless. Cultivate a cheerful disposition. Nothing is so destructive of good looks as constant worrying, and while nervous women cannot entirely control this habit, it cannot be denied that many of them indulge in gloomy fancies more than the circumstances would warrant.—Western Housekeeper.

Elected County Treasurer.

Miss Katie E. Johnson, of Norton, Kan., who was elected Treasurer of the county on the Republican ticket, was born in Shelby County, Indiana, in 1865. She went with her parents to Leavenworth county in 1870 and moved to a homestead in Norton County in 1878. Here she attended the common schools. She received a third grade teacher's certificate and taught for two terms. She used the money in securing a better education, and next received a first grade certificate and attended the State Normal one year. She served six years in the county treasurer's office as deputy or assistant treasurer. She owns two good farms, which she manages herself and finds them profitable investments. She is good-looking and sociable, but cares little for society or "pink teas."

MISS JOHNSON.

Men Nervous at the Altar.

It is certain that at the wedding ceremony it is always the man and not the woman who is "rattled." Ministers testify to the fact, and any prospective bridegroom will bear witness to the awful feeling of apprehension with which he looks forward to the wedding ceremony in which he is to play an important part. It is really a piece of self-consciousness which shows the conceit of man and for which there is no need; the bridegroom is a matter of little consideration to anyone, possibly excepting the bride, when the great occasion arrives.

To Make an Egg Reveal Its Age.

To ascertain the freshness of an egg, without breaking, hold it before a strong light and look directly through the shell. If the yolk appears round and the white surrounding it clear, the chances are that the egg is fresh. Or you may drop it into water; if the egg sinks quickly and remains at the bottom it is in all probability fresh, but if it stands on end it is doubtful, and quite bad if it floats. The shell of a fresh egg looks dull, while that of a stale one is glossy.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in Ladies' Home Journal.

Woman Admitted to the Bar.

Miss Katie Rochford, of Devon, Iowa, is the first woman ever admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of South Dakota. She was subjected to a very rigid examination at Pierre, but acquitted herself creditably. In 1895 she took the degree of B. S. at the Northern Indiana Normal College at Valparaiso. She has studied law with Joseph Kirby, Sioux Falls, S. D. Her father, G. E. Rochford, is a prominent business man at Devon, Iowa.

MISS ROCKFORD.

British Women Live Longer than Men.

Despite the fragility with which their sex is credited, the number of British female centenarians greatly exceeds that of the men, 225 women out of every 1,000,000 reaching the century mark, while only 80 men out of the same number round out 100 years.

In Up-to-Date Homes.

Some really original salt-cellars are shell-shape and a relief from the usual pattern.

A pretty idea long familiar to the French is the luxuriously embroidered chamber towel, with long grille fringes of silk and cotton.

Table-centers are made of colored or shot silk, with insertions of gold-run guipure and butterflies and flowers appliqued on the silk. Some are entirely of lace, with Louis Seize medallions in silk.

On old oak or Chippendale tables tea-cloths of finest Breton lace, with insertions of Cluny look the best. Some have openwork ecclesiastical designs and come from Austria, France and Ireland.

Silken sofa pillows in French tapestry, with a pineapple pattern wrought in gold, are popular. So are pillows of hand-embroideded satins on grounds of dull blue and terra-cotta or conventional poppies on green, with flounces of art silk.

White china for ferns and flowers is ever popular, and there is a growing tendency among young housekeepers to buy the pure white china, as a table never grows tiresome if decked in spotless ware with the necessary color added in centerpiece or a bit of Wedgwood.

Abundant Locks in Favor.

Fashionable women are using hair-dressing again, so, though he admires her gleaming hair, he must let it alone. The belle now does not wash her hair, but brushes it and wipes off each strand with a towel dipped in some dressing. She rubs the scalp carefully, parting the hair in different places, but she would not think of wasting the natural oil by washing the hair, and yet you remember how we used to wash our locks and dry them in the sun every week if we expected to attain the desired fluff.

STYLISH COIFFURES.

The current fashionable fancies in hair-dressing are in favor of the women whose locks are long and plentiful, but here are two coiffures for heads not so liberally supplied. In the first the hair was waved and arranged in loose coils and puffs in back. Directly on top it formed a loop, re-enforced by a pretty ornament of black velvet and jet. In the other short, wavy hair was arranged in puffs at the sides and in fluffy curls in back, while at the top came a double puff, one on top of the other. Two combs were placed among the curls in front. With women whose hair is abundant, the pompadour still holds its own. Jeweled side combs are no longer worn except for full dress.

ABOUT THE BABY.

Being pleasant is largely a matter of habit, and the little baby may be taught to cultivate good humor.

"Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it" is a maxim as true to-day as it was when the world was young. Discourage impatient behavior at all times. First, by imparting the knowledge to the unolding consciousness that nothing is ever gained by crying. Primarily, the child must be taught through its recognized desires; the ethics of conscience may be appealed to later. Then, by convincing him of the potency of a smile.

A baby of six months has a pretty well defined idea of his importance and will become a small despot if he is not made to see, through the gentlest but most persistent training, that there are other needs besides his own to be considered.

I have in mind a little one who, the minute it was time for her bottle, screamed until it was given to her. Then a wise woman begun to "bend the twig."

"Smile and coo, baby," she said, over and over again, "and I will give you your bottle."

For a while it seemed the experiment would fail. The little limbs straightened and the small back was curved backward alarmingly, but through the sharp cries the nurse's voice continued smoothly:

"Smile and coo, baby; stop crying, and smile if you want your bottle."

Suddenly the wee girl looked up; the red faded from her face. "Agoo!" she said, and received the bottle smilingly.

Worn by Women.

A new boa is flat, made of ermine and tied in a broad bow in front edged with ermine tails.

Most stunning muffs are made long and narrow of deep tawny orange or Wedgewood blue velvet trimmed with fur.

The newest dress models tighten the atrocious bloused waist and do not permit the cloth to overhang the belt in the back or on the sides.

Among the many new black materials seen is one which has a ladder-like arrangement of tiny tucks over a colored ground. This material is made up on the length or crosswise.

Skirts are guiltless of stiff linings and hang in soft folds. Cloth skirts with pouched velvet waists are fashionable. A green-plaid skirt with a green-velvet waist is a pretty combination.

Tailor gowns are not much different from the spring patterns. The cloth strappings are worn as much as ever, but the smartest coats are faced with white cloth, with strappings of the colored cloth laid closely over the white.

The best of collarbands are made straight in front with pieces of satin turned over in the back, shaped, not frilled, and standing out. Neckties are still tied in front but linen collars have given place to ones of muslin and lawn and lace.

Former Governor William Sprague, of Rhode Island, recently met his two daughters in Washington for the first time in eighteen years. Mr. Sprague was divorced from his wife, and his daughters have not been allowed to communicate with him.

AN AMBITIOUS GIRL.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

This paper recently received information that the ten-year-old daughter of Mr. M. Rybolt, of Hartsville, Ind., had been cured of a severe illness. The case seemed more than an ordinary one, and consequently a special representative was sent to investigate.

The Rybolts are well-to-do farmers living about two miles southwest of Hartsville. When the reporter called Mr. and Mrs. Rybolt and their daughter in question, Louise, were at home, also the other three children. Louise is the oldest. She had been going to school for four years, and was formerly in very good health, but for the past year or more she has been ill.

A year ago the present winter it was noticed that she was breaking down in health. For a time the cause could not be ascertained, but it was finally decided that it was from over-study. It has always been the ambition of Louise to educate herself as soon as possible, for she was anxious to graduate from the common branches early, and to enter a college of music, which her parents promised she could do as soon as she should finish the common branches.

How many children by diligent study to achieve their ambitions are injuring their health. It was so in this case. The child studied hard all day and often far into the night, and had won the respect and admiration of her teacher and of all the school by her aptness, and rapid learning.

For some time Louise experienced an indisposition which she would not make known to her parents, for fear they would have her remain from school. Her headache soon became unendurable, and was noticed by her teacher. She had by this time grown pale and weak.

One day she became suddenly sick at school, and was taken home.

For several weeks she suffered from a fever, and the physicians could not rally her. A neighbor urged them to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, which they finally did with splendid results. Louise began getting better at once, and by the time she had consumed ten boxes of the pills she was cured.

"What you have written is true," said Mrs. Rybolt. "I don't think Louise would have recovered had it not been for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. She is in perfect health to-day, and able to re-enter school.

"We are using these pills in our family when we need medicine, and find that they do more good than doctors' medicines, and they are not nearly so expensive. I would be glad to recommend them to any one who is sick, and can especially recommend them in any case similar to Louise's."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. These pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Scientists Having Fun.

Science isn't a dry pursuit altogether. The visitors to the International Geological Congress in St. Petersburg made pleasure trips of several thousand miles on trains and ships furnished by the Russian Government. The government furnished one train of fifteen sleeping cars, with two locomotives, and another train of new freight cars with tables to accommodate twenty persons at meals at once, with refrigerator and other cars carrying food and drink. The dining train preceded the other, and the meals were always served at stations to the whole party at one time. Wherever places at any distance from the railroad were to be visited carriages were provided for all who wished to ride, not an easy thing for about 150 persons in a mining region. On the Kama and Volga, from Perm to Nijni-Novgorod (1,000 miles), a fine steamship was provided.

New Route to Health.

Little, fragrant, palatable tablets, in a dainty enameled metal box, just right for the vest pocket or the lady's purse. On the tablets are stamped the letters, "C. C. C." Cascarets, Candy Cathartic. Eat one like candy and the little tablet at once purifies and regulates the whole digestive canal. It destroys disease germs in the mouth and throat, stops souring of undigested food in the stomach, stirs up the liver, and tones and strengthens the bowels, making them act healthily and naturally. They are well and widely advertised in the press, but the best advertisement for Cascarets is their wonderfully mild yet positive action, which makes a Cascaret convert of everyone that tries them. We recommend them to all our readers.

A Heathen for the Occasion.

"Johnnie," said Mrs. Chaffle sternly, "where did you get this dime I found in your pocket?"

"You gave it to me yourself."

"I did no such thing."

"Yes, you did, mamma, dear. You told me to put it in the missionary box and the teacher heard me swear one day and said I was a regular little heathen, so I kept that dime for myself."

Source of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Earth's Speed Not Even.

It is an interesting fact that the earth does not travel at the same rate in all parts of its journey through space. Its orbit being elliptical, it must at some time approach nearer to the sun than at others, and will take less time in moving through one part of its path than through another. In winter the earth is nearer the sun than in summer, and moves through space more rapidly.

SAPOLIO

It is distasteful to many people to see their names in public print as indorsers of proprietary remedies. They feel a natural aversion to having their ailments published in the newspapers. At the same time a feeling of humanity prompts them now and then to say something that may lead to such relief of other sufferers as they have themselves experienced. This was the case with one of New York City's merchant princes, a man who stands at the head of his particular line of trade. Not long ago he declared that Ripans Tabules were "simply admirable" for correcting disorders of the digestive organs. He found that they sweeten the stomach, that they gently move the bowels, and that they give quick relief from the distress that accompanies indigestion. This gentleman says that he will never again allow himself to be without a supply of Ripans Tabules.

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

PLUNDER IN CAVES.

Adams County has gang of thieves who have stolen about everything they could get at, They have occupied a number of caves dug in old sheds and similar buildings, for several years, and these are filled with all sorts of plunder, even including wheat. clover seed, groceries, dry goods, etc. Now the authorities have unearthed the gang, arrested several and are getting back piles of stolen goods. Some of the caves had several rooms, in which were boxes etc. locked up, and altogether, they had very cosy homes under the ground, and had apparently lived there for years. It is supposed that part of the gang are absent, working a new territory, and hence were not arrested. But it is thought the discoveries so far made will break up the business.

MOTHER IN ISRAEL.

Seventy Years Old and a Professional Tramp and Beggar

Friday afternoon Marshal Potter escorted an aged and feeble old lady to the the Lake Shore depot and there she purchased a ticket to Fort Wayne. While waiting for the train Mr. Potter had her open her grip, as he thought perhaps she had escaped from some public institution. In a book was found an agreement which in substance bound some man in Pennsylvania to support her during her life in consideration of $750. She said she did not receive proper support and preferred to make her own living by tramping. She was of a very coarse disposition and called Mr. Potter some names which would have stirred up a racket at once had she not been a woman. The train came and she was put on board. A COURIER man happened to be on the same train. As we neared Fort Wayne the old lady began to feel the need of money to pay her expenses in that city and she took up a collection from all the men on board. She realized money enough to stay a night at least at the best hotel in the city.

QUITE A SENSATION

W. J. Frederick gets up quite a sensation on the occasion of his second marriage. As heretofore intimated in the COURIER it has been known for some time that Mrs. Frederick was to be married to Miss Marie Paxton, the accomplished elocutionist, who not long ago had puplis in Garrett and Auburn. Mr. Frederick had been divorced from his wife and the family it appears had been well provided for. It also appears that when Mr. Frederick became engaged to Miss Paxton, he had agreed to settle on her a handsome sum of money. Then the story, as shown forth in papers from the bride's home, at Butler, Ohio, is that when Frederick went there to be married, the bride's mother put the daughter up to feign nervous prostration so that she could not stand up to be married. Then the story goes on to state that they so worked on Frederick feelings, that he raised the amount a thousand or two, and then the wedding took place about a week ago. Papers from the same place state that Frederick's family at Garrett hearing he had gone off suspected what it was for and sent detectives on after him. But that they got there too late. We have quite a sensational article on this matter in a paper sent us from that town. But we presume it is pretty highly colored, and we only give this extract for what it is worth. The only thing certain about the matter is, that Mr. Frederick and Miss Paxton are married.

A BIG DEFICIT.

Congress will be called on at the coming session to face a big deficit in Uncle Sam's finances. "No more deficits" was one of the republican assertions during the last campaign. So, in order to get more money, they reduced the rates on some lines of liquors and other luxuries, and also raised the rate of tariff duty so high on some articles that usually come from abroad, that people could not afford to import them. And now we find the deficit quite large. And in the face of all this, nearly every congressman has a bill or scheme to get an appropriation from the public crib for some improvement in his district. So it looks as if, between the demands of congressmen and the diminishing of the cash on hand, that the coming congress will have its hands full to keep the promises so freely made last year. It can be easily managed, however, by keeping the appropriations down to a sensible amount, and then we will not need to increase the revenues. At least a half of the cities that are now asking for public buildings, do not need them, or if they need them, less expensive ones would do. And it is well known that any such building by the general government costs about double what would be the cost to a private person. Even the lots on which such buildings are placed, is put up at about three prices for Uncle Sam, merely because he is supposed to be rich and soft hearted. And half the money spent on river and harbor improvements could be saved, by improving only such as really need it. Let Uncle Sam make a better record as a business man and he will have money enough without taxing the people a penny more. It is economy we need, not higher taxation. The people demand this reform, and those who fail to grant it, will be very apt to hear something drop in the near future.

ACTION NEEDED.

Not Stimulated Action, but Sustaining, Nourishing and Fixed Action as Generated by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

To be healthy, strong nervous action must be well supplied to the organs. There is no activity in the body except by and through the nerves. The heart, liver, kidneys and everything are inactive from lack of nerve power. Poisons remain in the body because there is no nerve power to expel them. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cures by its action on the nerves; it is at once food and medicine for them. It sustains and nourishes by its soothing effect; produces refreshing sleep, which enables them to recuperate. It regulates so that no waste occurs; it cures the cause, goes to the root and restores health. C. N. Pace, Roseville, Ohio, tells in the following words what it did for him:

"I was prostrated about a year ago and kept growing worse under treatment of my physician until I could not sleep or hold a small object safely. I was reduced to 110 pounds and to a state of absolute hopelessness. I commenced using Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. Improvement was noticeable from first dose, was able to sleep, regained muscular control, nervousness abated; I continued to improve, and from the use of seven bottles I am today in perfect health, weighing 152 pounds, a gain of 42 pounds in a few weeks."

When his nerves were restored to healthy action, his food made good, rich blood; the blood made flesh, strength and health.

FINALLY FOUND THE COAT.

(Goshen Daily Times.)

Sometime during last May the home of the Misses Berryman at 313 South Fifth street was entered by thieves and among the articles taken were a pair of opera glasses and several pieces of costly jewelry. The police investigated the matter but were unable to find any clue and the affair has long since been forgotten. When cold weather arrived the Misses Berryman sought their winter wearing apparel and then discovered that a coat was missing. They naturally concluded that it was stolen by the burglars who had paid the visit in the spring. Last Saturday afternoon the ladies were greatly surprised when a person entered their millinery store at 124 East Lincoln avenue wearing the coat which they readily recognized as the one that had disappeared from their house. The stranger was kept in the place until Constable Albert Yates was sent for and after repeatedly questioning the lady, who appeared to be greatly frightened, he learned that her husband had found the coat in the road. She gave her name as Mrs. Matilda Grant.

An affidavit was then filed in Justice Young's court by Miss Mabel Berryman, charging Mrs. Matilda Grant with larceny. Mr. Grant was quickly found and he said that he could prove that he found the article in question by Ellwood Steinmetz, a saloonkeeper at New Paris. Constable Yates went to that village at once and Steinmetz told him that while he was returning home with Grant one night last May they found the coat in front of John Violett's house. Of course Mr. Grant should have advertised the matter but he neglected to do so and as the evidence was conclusive that the coat was found, Judge Young ordered that it be returned to its owner and dismissed the case.

YEARLY STREET FAIR.

Ft. Wayne business men are taking steps to organize a street fair to be held every year. Their plan is to organize now and each man who joins the association will pay a small monthly amount as dues and in this way there will be accumulated by next fall a good sum which can then be used to promote the street fair, and so on for each year. In this way the expense of the fair will not be felt by the people and they can easily make it permanent It looks like a good plan.

"Just as Good as Scott's and we sell it much cheaper," is a statement sometimes made by the druggist when Scott's Emulsion is called for. This shows that the druggists themselves regard of Cod-Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda as the standard, and the purchaser who desires to procure the "standard" because he knows it has been of untold benefit, should not for one instant think of taking the risk of using some untried preparation. The substitution of something said to be "just as good" for a standard preparation twenty-five years on the market, should not be permitted by the intelligent purchaser.

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper.

KNOTTING BEE.

A Number Of Ladies Royally Entertained.

This afternoon Mrs. S. S. Potter on South Cedar Street enterta ned a number of ladies at a knotting bee. That is there were in all six comforts to knot and it required a good many stories to entertain the company while the work was being done. The gentle sex, when assembled are not always quiet, and when a tired and worn out newspaper man happened by the shrieks of laughter which came from the house made us wish we were invited. At the proper time a dainty but delicate luncheon was served which consisted of a variety of good things, and was relished by all. They were:

Mesdames Harley Bumpus, Alva Baker, Milo Calkins, F. Draggoo, E. B. Johnson, Ike Jones, Chas. Picker, J. F. Baughman, J. A. Bolinger, Chas Bolton. Willis Jenners, Elmer Miller, Clyde Brandon, Artie Beaty, Even Kutzner, R. Sawvel, Will Wile, Will Thomas, Ed Beaty, John C. Lochner and Miss Sadie Ferril.

THE GANG HEARD FROM.

(Hicksville News.)

The member of the gang of chicken thieves who escaped from the officers when the rest of the crowd were rounded up last week, proved to be Daniel Bodiker, also of Newville. The officers got wind of his whereabouts and last Thursday snapped the young man up. He was lodged in our city strong box until the sheriff of Auburn called for him. In the meantime it was considered that Allen county wanted the gang the most, and Bodiker was taken by officer Miller to Ft. Wayne. DeKalb county surrendered the others to Sheriff Melcher, of Allen county, and the gang are now in jail awaiting trial. They failed to furnish bonds and hence are confined. It is doubtful if they will have turkey for thanksgiving.

NOT ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD

A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer a much from distressing kidney and bladder troubles as the men. The womb is situated back of and very close to the bladder, and for that reason any distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort.

The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided by setting urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need doctoring. If you have pain or dull aching in the back. pass water to frequently, or scanty supply, with smarting or burning, these are also convincing proofs of kidney trouble If you have doctored without benefit, try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. The mild and extraordinary effect will surprise you. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. If you take a medicine you should take the best. At druggists fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention AUBURN COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

HELLO!

Did you say that you were not feeling well and that your stomach was out of order? We'll then, try a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and you are sure of relief. WATCH IN ITS STOMACH.

A dispatch from Essex Conn., calls up a few queer things. Among them we find this:

The fishing smack Hoodeneganset, Capt. Skidmore, from an eastern port, with fish, has a variety of relics from the deep.

Among them is a lady's gold watch taken from a codfish's stomach, near the reef off Nantucket. The timepiece is marked on the interior of the case, "Bergee No. 8722, London, England," with no date.

It is supposed the watch was lost overboard from some ocean steamship. It is in a perfect state of preservation, with the hands marking 12:15 o'clock.

NO PAY—NO CURE

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Chills and Malaria. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price 50c. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

Junction Foundry

Some people make mistakes of one kind and another. But the farmer who wants to increase his crops and reduce his expenses, will make no mistake if he buys his plows and points, land rollers and general repairs of O. W. Werntz & Co. Auburn Junction.

IT IS STRANGE

that some people who say they never read patent medicine advertisements will be found lugging home every now and then a bottle of some favorite remedy of theirs. We don't bother you with much reading, but just ask you to try a 10c trial bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin for constipation, indigestion and stomach troubles. 50c and $1 sizes. A F. E. A SAD THANKSGIVING.

For Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rohm who Live North of Town.

Thanksgiving was a day of sorrow instead of gladness for Mr. and Mrs. Albert Rohm, who live just north of the city. Wednesday evening at about 5 o'clock their little four year old daughter Rilla, was playing with the fire and her clothing ignited, and she was burned to a crisp. The little girl suffered untold agony until 12 o'clock when her life went out and her suffering ceased. The stricken parents have the sympathy of many in this the saddest time in their life. Only those who have experienced the loss of loved ones can sympathize with them most.

The funeral was today at 2 p. m. at the Church of God, and interment in Woodlawn.

IT WAS THANKSGIVING.

Thanksgiving was a pretty rainy day, but everybody had something to be thankful for. Even the old reliable COURIER and its family, had much to be grateful for on this 25th day of November 1897, for Mr. and Mrs. Fremont Smith, came along West Seventh street, and they stopped at the next residence east of the great M. E. church and left the fattest young chicken and the choicest lot of luscious pears, that ever graced a Thanksgiving dinner. And it is not often that one has home grown pears so late as this, and these were delicious So, we are thankful for this among many other causes, and especially thankful for such friends. And all over town, the rainy sky looked down on many a home gathering with steaming dinners, reunions of the families, and words of cheer and thankfulness abounded all over Auburn.

MR. GUNSENHOUSER

Surveyor Krontz brings word that Commissioner Gunsenhouser met with an accident Wednesday while working in the woods at his home. A log rolled on his leg and broke it. His friends will be sorry to hear of his misfortune.

THE OLD CEMETERY.

Charlie Bartels was over at Kendallville Monday, and while there had a talk with Mr. Harry I. Park in regard to the old part of the cemetery here, Mr. Park has several relatives buried there and is anxious to see it put in good shape and kept so. He prepared two papers for subscriptions to be used for that purpose. One paper is to raise money for an iron fence, which is estimated would have to be about 820 feet long, and cost something like $500 For this purpose, he heads the list of subscribers, putting down $125. On the other list, which is for the expense of keeping the grounds in proper repair he subscribed $3. Mr. Bartels and others interested will circulate these papers, asking such sums as the people feel like giving. If they succeed as we hope they may, this old cemetery where repose so many of the pioneers of Auburn and DeKalb county, will be redeemed from the disgraceful condition into which it had fallen. Let us see that it is done.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whisky nor other intoxicant but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mild on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone to the organs thereby aiding Nature in the performance of the functions. Electric Bitters is an excellent appetizer and aids digestion. Old People find it just exactly what they need. Price 50c. a bottle at McCord's Drug Store. 35

FROM COLORADO

We have received a letter from Mrs. E. E. Littlefield whose home is now at Monte Vista, Colorado. She says although she likes her home out there, she is homesick to hear from old Auburn, which is still dear to her. So she sends for the COURIER as the best way to hear all the news. She invites all her Auburn friends to come and see her, as they will be hearily welcomed. Her son, John is in school in the second year of the high school course, and the little daughter, Grace is in the 7th grade. She asks to be remembered to the friends here.

AS SEEN BY OTHERS.

One of Auburn's Leading Firms Gets Free Advertising.

The following notice appeared in the Albion New Era of Nov. 23. They cite Auburn's big store as a good precedent to follow showing what continous advertising will do. It reads:

"The firm of Bishop & Lackey, of Auburn, and their predecessors in business have used one column since 1880 and for several years past one and one half columns in advertising their extensive business in each of the Auburn papers. Some dry goods merchants think that it doesn't pay to advertise but here is a firm whose name or that of their predecessors have greeted thousands of readers each week for 17 years and this has made their names household words in that section. They are now, not only using Auburn papers but Garrett and Waterloo papers, and occasionally others to let the people know where to buy and buy the cheapest. This is an advertising record to be proud of. But they have another record, the result of this which they appreciate more, that they have the largest trade of any dry goods merchants in DeKalb county, yes, with possibly one exception, more than any two stores in the county. In a financial way they have outstripped all competitors. Who thinks advertising does not pay?"

SENTENCED

ANGOLA, IND. Nov. 26, 1897,
Special to DAILY COURIER:

John Thomas, a tough character of Pleasant Lake, observed Thanksgiving yesterday by appearing before his honor, Judge Roby, and receiving a sentence of from one to twenty-one years in States prison for burning J. W. Goodwin's dry kiln at Pleasant Lake last summer. Thompson wanted to run a saloon at that place and Goodwin, remonstrated against him. Thompson then committed the crime of arson for revenge. Our people look with uviversal favor on the verdict.

MORE ROBBERS.

BAD BOYS

Auburn is not the only town that has bad boys. The Princeton Record speaks serious trouble they are having there. It appears that a gang of lads have organized to go west or somewhere to kill and scalp Indians, but having no transportation handy, have concluded to stay and terrorize the people at home. Lately they have taken to waylaying boys of their age at some lonely place, and two lads were severly beaten. The first kept still about it. The second made a complain to his father and the latter took the matter up. Then both fathers went to Warsaw, the county seat, and got warrants to arrest the gang. Two evidently ringleaders, escaped, but some of the others were hauled up and for a few days stood face to face with the law. But at present it looks as though the matter would be settled out of court, as the boys not appear to have done anything worse than beating the two lads. But it is high time they were stopped and their war paint washed off, or they may do something worse.

CIRCLING THE GLOBE

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings.

FEARFUL EXPLOSION.

Chesterfield, Ind., a Mass of Ruins Every House Being Moved from Its Foundation.

Chesterfield, Ind., was almost wiped off the map by an explosion of eighty quarts of nitro-glycerine, which had been brought overland from Montpelier and placed in an open field, a half mile from the town.

Marion Mansey and Sam Maguire were working at a gas well near by when the explosion occurred. Mansey was thrown fifty feet, but was not fatally injured, Maguire was thrown a hundred feet in the air and badly lacerated, but will recover.

James Gold's house, 300 rods distant, was torn to pieces. The explosion tore a hole in the ground down to the water line.

A three-ton engine was torn to fragments and every animal in the vicinity was killed instantly.

The little town of Chesterfield is a mass of ruins, every house being moved from its foundation, windows shattered, doors smashed in, every light put out and the plastering shaken from the walls. Several people were shaken out of bed.

At Dallsville, two miles away, and at Yorktown, five miles distant, the damage was almost as great. Many people were injured, and it is a miracle that none were killed outright.

The jar of the explosion was felt for fifteen miles in all directions.

GENERAL TRADE DULL.

Commercial Reports Show Little Advance.

Bradstreet's says: Notwithstanding the appearance of a demand for holiday specialties, at some points in the south, at Chicago, St. Louis and in regions tributary thereto, the general trade throughout the country has shown no general improvement. The most favorable reports come from west of the Mississippi and north of Missouri and Kansas, where colder weather stimulated the demand at interior points, and county merchants have been buying with comparative freedom. The eastern cotton goods industry continues depressed. Consumers evidently do not intend to buy extensively until they believe prices of raw cotton are ready to advance. Iron and steel have not been in as active demand as expected, and are lower, notwithstanding furnaces and mills are supplied with orders sufficient to carry them well into the next year. A favorable feature is found in advances in the wages of operatives in various industrial lines.

Spaniards Laugh at It.

Havana special: The tube reported to have contained dynamite, which was found by a man subsequently arrested by a private watchman of the American Consulate building, near the door of the Consulate, is classed in official circles as being nothing more than a joke. The man arrested is believed to be the individual who placed the tube where it was found. But in order to guard against any possibilities, the Spanish officials are taking precautions to guard the United States Consulate and protect the United States Consul General, Gen. Fitzhugh Lee.

To Poison a Family.

An attempt was made to poison the entire family of Jacob Hooser, Sr., near Platteville, Wis. Strychnine was placed in a pail of water and also in a pot of coffee on the stove. A daughter of Mrs. Hooser drank some of the water and was shortly afterward taken violently ill, but the proper antidote being applied she recovered. The poisoned coffee was discovered before anybody drank it. The District Attorney has been informed of the case by telegraph and will make a thorough investigation.

Spain's Tardy Act.

Havana special: Marshal Blancho, the new Captain General of Cuba, has been authorized by the Government at Madrid to sign a credit of $100,000, to be devoted to the immediate relief of the suffering peasants who have been gathered in the vicinity of the towns occupied by the Spanish troops, as a precautionary measure, and who had been suffering great hardships and privation.

A Wisconsin Lynching.

Jerry Johnson, a negro, was lynched by a mob near Screven, Wis. While in charge of officers being taken to jail, a crowd of armed men rode up and perforated his body with leaden balls. The negro was arrested for stealing a bicycle.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne.

The following are the attractions at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Dec. 4.—Gus Hill.

Japs Quiet Down.

Hawaiian Minister Francis M. Hatch, who has just arrived at Washington from Honolulu, has expressed the opinion that the trouble between Japan and Hawaii has been smoothed out, and can be settled now without difficulty or irritation.

Rat-Killing Contest Ended.

Newark (Ohio) special: The big rat hunt in Union Township has ended in a victory for Capt. King's company, King's men having killed 3,228 and Smoke's men 2,045 in four weeks.

St. Louis Warehouse Burns.

A disastrous fire occurred in North St. Louis in the warehouse of the Ravenswood Distillery Company. The loss will amount to $100,000, insurance about 75 per cent. Two employes were rolling a barrel of alcohol when the bung flew out and a stream of alcohol covered a lantern.

Gypsies Kidnap Children.

At St. Louis, Mo., four gypsies tried to kidnap Willie and Henry Wilman, aged 10 and 8 years. Henry escaped and told John, an elder brother, who procured a revolver and went after the gypsies, who were carrying off Willie. John forced the nomads to release the boy.

THEIR SALARY IS EXEMPT.

Postmasters' Compensation Cannot Be Taxed by State or Municipality.

The issue as to whether a State or municipality can levy an income tax on the salary or compensation of a postmaster, a subject of broad interest to the Federal service generally, was decided in an opinion rendered by Acting Assistant Attorney General Harrison J. Barrett for the Postoffice Department at Washington. The case arose on an inquiry from the postmaster at Gastonia, N. C. It held that a State has no authority to tax the emoluments paid to any officers or agents which the United States may use and employ as necessary and proper means to execute its sovereign power. Mr. Barrett says: "The Government of the United States is supreme within its sphere of action and any act of State or municipality which attempts to tax the emoluments paid to the officers of the Government is unconstitutional and void. If the power existed in a State to tax the officers or agents of the Government it could thereby impair the power of the United States in the execution of its sovereignty."

DECLARES HE IS AN EMBEZZLER.

Former City Clerk of Durango, Colo., Surrenders to Chicago Police.

A man claiming to be Charles E. Meuser, city clerk of Durango, Colo., and who says he is wanted there for embezzling $500 of the city's funds, walked into the Harrison street police station in Chicago and surrendered. "For six months prior to leaving Durango," said Meuser, "I had been stealing the city's funds, and altogether I stole about $500. There was a festival in Denver, and I went there with the Durango band, of which I am a member. Knowing that my embezzlement would soon be found out, I decided to look for employment in Chicago and make good the amount I had stolen. I was unable to find work, and when I was reduced to 95 cents I decided to go back and face the authorities." Meuser is about 30 years old, and was formerly city editor of the Durango Herald.

OUR INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Dr. W. N. Hailmann Praises the Influence of Returning Students.

Some interesting data as to the educational aspect of the Indian problem is given in the annual report of Dr. W. N. Hailmann, superintendent of the Indian schools, which has just been made public at Washington. The subject of students going back to their tribes after school life is taken up, and Supt. Hailmann says he is still collecting data bearing on this phase of the problem; but the information already obtained justifies the statement that the severe criticisms made of both the Indians and schools on this score if at all justifiable are so only in a limited degree. Wherever on reservations there has been marked progress in civilization it is traceable largely to the returned students.

Bradstreet's Favorable Report.

Bradstreet's says: "There is a moderate improvement in staple prices and in the distribution of woolen goods, shoes, hats and hardware in the region tributary to Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha. Colder weather northwest and in the central Mississippi and Missouri river valleys has helped retail trading. Manufacturers of iron, steel, agricultural implements, railway cars and woolens report an active demand and large output. Higher prices are recorded for wheat, corn, oats, sirups, hides, leather, shoes and turpentine. The reaction in iron and steel is likely to be followed by an advance if the present rate of consumption continues. Lower prices for wheat flour and pork are expected to recognize the advances on wheat and Indian corn, so that a lower price for copper is practically the only important decline in the week. Wheat exports show a heavy increase alike over last week and last year, and with one exception, that of the second week in September, make the largest single week's total on record. The total exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States and from Montreal this week aggregate 6,653,792 bushels, against 5,445,542 last week and 3,937,000 a year ago. The total exports in the second week of September, 1891, were 6,974,000 bushels. Corn exports also show a gain, aggregating 3,207,790 bushels for the week, against 2,975,721 last year. There are 235 business failures reported throughout the United States this week, compared with 273 last week and 308 a year ago."

Blanco's Hopeless Task.

The policy of the new Government is enraging the Spaniards in Cuba. Marshal Blanco's merciful program is denounced, and shouts for Weyler and revenge are frequently heard. On the other hand, the insurgents are just as bitter and irreconcilable. Autonomy is scoffed at and will not be accepted. It is said that Blanco is disheartened at the outlook, as he has discovered there is no chance for pacification of the island under the plans formulated by the Sagasta ministry. Reports from Matanzas say that the conservatives, having become enraged at the change in the Government's policy, are disturbing public order. Ex-Mayor Crespo initiated the disorderly conduct by publicly giving offense to Senor Armas, the new civil governor of the province. The chief of police followed Senor Crespo's lead by endeavoring to prevent aid being given to the suffering reconcentrados by newspaper correspondents and others. Of the reconcentrados in Matanzas, numbering more than 50,000, seventy-nine died in two days, thirty-seven perishing from hunger.

Emperor William's Threat.

A dispatch to the London Daily Chronicle from Christiana, with reference to the political conflict between Norway and Sweden as to the relative rights of the two parts of the composite monarchy, says: "A prominent Swedish politician attributes to Emperor William the following statement: 'If the Norwegians seek to accomplish their ends I will crush Norway as I have already crushed Greece.'"

Ohio Farmer Fatally Wounded.

William Horan shot and fatally wounded Allen Griffy in a street quarrel at Goshen, O. Horan surrendered himself. He says Griffy had threatened to kill him and was out hunting for him when they met. Both are farmers and Griffy was wealthy.

Pitcher Turns Preacher.

Following in the footsteps of "Billy" Sunday, another professional baseball player has turned evangelist. The latest acquisition to the ranks of the teachers of scripture is Edward M. Lewis, one of the pitchers of the Boston Baseball club.

California Is Shaken.

Two very distinct shocks of earthquake were felt at Randsburg, Cal. The vibrations were from north to south. Buildings shook perceptibly, but no damage was done.

Steers Roast in a Car.

Sixteen head of cattle were roasted alive in a Santa Fe cattle car at Wakarusa station, Kansas. The bellowing of the tortured beasts could be heard for miles.

Schuylkill Colliery Is Given Up.

Schuylkill colliery, a familiar landmark of the Mahanoy valley, which has been in operation since 1863, has been abandoned.

He Killed John M. Clayton.

The murderer of John M. Clayton of Arkansas, it is claimed, is now serving a term in the Georgia penitentiary. He is a white man, and his term will soon expire. J. M. Clayton, a brother of Powell Clayton, a Republican leader, was murdered in November, 1888, and while the State of Arkansas was quivering with excitement the assassin escaped to the mountains of north Georgia. He remained there under an assumed name until the penchant for crime mastered him, and he worked his way into convict stripes. In a moment when his secret preyed too heavily upon his mind he imparted it to a fellow convict, who told a guard named Aiken. Aiken, who claims to hold the key to the mystery, was seen. He is holding his information for a reward, and declines to disclose the convict's name at this time. Gov. Jones of Arkansas has reopened the case, and has authorized a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of Clayton's murderer.

CONGRESS MAY SIT UNTIL AUGUST.

Burrows of Michigan Believes a Long Session Is Likely.

The general opinion that the coming session of Congress will be a short one is opposed by Senator Burrows of Michigan, who has just arrived in Washington, and who declares that the session will likely last until August. "In addition to the routine business of Congress," he said, "the Hawaiian question will be disposed of and consideration will be given to the currency question, immigration and a few other things. I think that the question of the annexation of Hawaii will come up very soon after the meeting of Congress, and will be disposed of in favor of annexation. As to the Cuban question, the situation is very peculiar. Probably by the latter part of January or some time in February we will know what the result of Spain's new policy is going to be, and meanwhile Congress should take no action. I think," he added, "that the most perplexing thing that confronts us is how to handle the currency question."

CONCESSION BY UNITED STATES.

Willing to Suspend Sealing on the Pribyloff Islands for a Year.

One of the most important features of the Bering sea negotiations, not heretofore disclosed, is that in the event that Great Britain and Canada consent to the suspension of pelagic sealing for one year the United States will agree to a suspension of all killing of seals for one year on the Pribyloff Islands, constituting the American seal possessions in Bering sea. As the islands are a part of the United States territory, no question has ever arisen as to the right of the United States to do as it chose as to the seals while on land and within three miles of the shore, the three miles being a part of the islands, according to international law. The contention of the United States was primarily for the suspension of pelagic sealing, but under the exigencies of the case it was felt that if that suspension could be secured it would be reasonable to concede a similar suspension within United States territory.

An Enterprising Young Desperado.

Alvah Kooken, the young cattle thief who held up three officers who had arrested him at Emporia, Kan., and escaped, was captured at Cheney. He was discovered on the blind baggage when the train left Goddard. Word was sent to Cheney, and when the train pulled in there three officers with Winchesters got the drop on the young desperado and made him hand over three revolvers. Kooken was sent to the reform school not over five years ago, and is not over 21 years old. He has served two years in the Missouri penitentiary.

Murder Spoils a Wedding.

A murder broke up the wedding feast at the marriage of Katie Silverstein to Isaac Goldstein in a tenement house in Henry street, New York. Charles Schapiro arrived at the festivities armed with a revolver, shot Louis Lieberman in the abdomen, inflicting a wound from which Lieberman died shortly afterward, and he would have killed Lieberman's son Meyer had not two detectives arrived in time to save him.

New Trial for Koerner.

The Court of Appeals at Albany, N. Y., rendered a decision granting a new trial in the case of William Jay Koerner, under sentence of death for the murder of his sweetheart, Rose A. Redgate, in New York City, in September, 1896. Koerner is a newspaper artist, formerly of Pittsburg, Pa. His defense was insanity. The crime was committed on a crowded street, and in broad daylight.

Cubans Elect New Officers.

The Cuban assembly elected these officers for the republic: President, Gen. Bartolome Masso; vice-president, Mendez Capote; secretary of war, Brig. Aleman; secretary of state, Fonte Sterling; secretary of foreign affairs, Moreno Delatorre; secretary of the interior, Dr. Manuel R. Silva; commander-in-chief of the army, Maximo Gomez; inspector general, Carlos Roloff.

Strange Way to Die.

Ed Buechner, aged 52, dealer in meat, was found dead at his shop in Topeka, Kan., drowned in a barrel used to catch drip water from a refrigerator. His head was under the water, although his feet were on the floor.

Gen. Ordway Dies in New York.

Gen. Albert Ordway, father of Bettina Girard, died at the Hoffman House, New York.

PRESIDENT HAS CARE

NO EASY TASK TO BE THE HEAD OF THIS REPUBLIC.

For Four Years Our Chief Executive Is the Greatest Burden Bearer of the Nation—Must Suppress All Personal Inclination and Assume Dignity.

Troubles of His Own.

Washington correspondence:

To be a President of the United States is by no means an easy task, and there is probably no man in the vast republic who carries such a load of care as the chief executive of the nation. From January till the time of his election in November he has to endure a physical and mental strain that would wreck the constitution of most men, and he emerges from the struggle bearing not only the palm of victory but also the thousand and one weighty details which are pressed upon him as the presumptive occupant of the executive mansion. From the time of his election till the morning of his inauguration he is the most watched, the most sought, and the most worked man in the country. And the cares already borne are only an intimation of those that come after his inaugural address has been read and he has taken possession of the executive mansion.

Not the least of the things which require the attention of the new occupant of the executive mansion is the care which must be taken not to say or do anything that would not be in accordance with the dignity and traditions of the great office he is endeavoring to fill. As in great things so it is with innumerable small affairs. He must many times a day ask himself the question if this or that suggested action is in keeping with the dignity of the President of the United States. Personal impulses by the thousand must be suppressed. The man must to a great extent make himself over. Almost without exception every American who has occupied the presidential office has risen to it, risen in character and dignity and manner, no matter how much below it he was at the outset. It is an office which demands that a man shall sink himself and become almost another entity.

The wonder is that so many of our Presidents have retained their personal characteristics and habits, their naturalness and simplicity, while in office. All the tendency is in the other direction. Unconsciously to the man himself he is drawn out of himself. He ceases to be as his friends knew him, as he knew himself, as he takes on a new consciousness. He is "the President." This fact he is never permitted to forget. It follows him everywhere. It bobs up impertinently at the simplest dinner in a country house as well as in a cabinet meeting at the executive mansion.

In monarchical countries sovereigns are reared. They are to the manner born. From infancy they are trained to be rulers. They approach gradually, step by step, the station which we thrust a man into almost without warning. It is a fact that the greatest, most stupendous transition which comes to any man in the world is to him whom the people of the United States take from his law office or his home or his modest official station and thrust into the presidential chair. A distinguished foreigner said not long ago: "It is amazing that you get as good Presidents as you do, and it is a remarkable thing that your public men are adaptable enough to rise so easily and naturally to the heights of your sovereignty. But they cannot be happy." This foreigner was right. Probably not one President in ten is happy while in office.

A Weight of Care.

As if this were not enough, our political system makes the President the center of party activity, of personal ambition and desire. Not only must all appointments be made theoretically by him as chief executive, but actually by him in person. Before making them he must see and talk with all the interested persons, no matter how great their number. If they come again and again, for the avowed purpose of "bringing the pressure of persistency," they must be seen and mollified. Crossroads politicians must have access to the ruler of the American people about seven-by-nine postoffices. The President must keep open house to all the Senators and Representatives in Congress, of whom there are something like 450, and the most of whom are professional office brokers. Through all this the President is expected to maintain his dignity and his equanimity, keep his patience unruffled and his sense of justice and of the fitness of things unwarped. During the whole four years of his administration he bears upon his shoulders the responsibilities and cares of the nation. In the case of most Presidents there is no cessation of toil. The cares of the chief executive are rarely dropped when he leaves the office. They accompany him to the social function, they are his constant companion as he attempts to enjoy a few days' outing, they are his most intimate associates even in his family circle, and they even follow him into his bed chamber and there minister to the discomforts of his slumber.

Americans are not always a considerate people, but it is doubtful if they ever had a better chance to see themselves as they really are than in the book which ex-President Benjamin Harrison has just published, in which he devotes a chapter to telling of his own experiences in the four years he passed in the White House. There seems to be no danger of the chief magistrate of the nation forgetting that he is, in the most literal sense of the words, a public servant, paid by the public for the public to enjoy at its leisure.

During the first three weeks of his term the President of these United States has to shake hands with not less than 40,000 of his fellow citizens. If any one has ever seen the Auditorium when 10,000 persons have been packed into it, and will multiply that number by four and contemplate shaking hands with all of them, he will form a notion of what infinite nuisances hand-shaking folk can make of themselves if you can only get enough of them together. Mr. Harrison records that every one who ever had to undergo the ordeal suffered acute physical torture until President Hayes discovered that if he reached forward and grasped the hand of an approaching "shaker" before the "shaker" had a chance to grasp his and squeeze it to show his good will he could escape serious discomfort and all actual pain. President McKinley—the Ohio man is fertile in resource—has another way; he holds his hand level with his waist with the back of it up and in this attitude it is only possible to get a firm grip on the fingers, which does not hurt nearly as much as pinching the rest of the hand.

But the handshaking lasts through the term, though not in such exorbitant quantities. It is not the only trouble. The letter writing fiend gets in his direful work—to the extent of some 800 letters a day. They ask all sorts of things, from an autograph for a log cabin quilt to the loan of money enough to buy a poor girl a piano. Then, if the President is not prompt to send them all they have requested, they write again to tell him what a mean man they have now learned he is. Private citizens take their turn with charitable and religious organizations in begging for money, and a woman in North Caloline telegraphed one morning: "I have six little children and they want to throw me out of the house. I have nowhere to go. I want protection." The autograph collector is numerously in evidence—scores of them every day of the 1,461 which make up a presidential term. A pile of cards and a bushel basket full of albums are the first things that greet a chief magistrate's satiated eyes every morning when he comes into his office. Then there is the man who wishes to have the opinion of the President of the United States on the best method of keeping calcimine from coming off on the clothing, or the woman who has just discovered a new process for fried cakes or sally lunn, and is willing to involve the White House cook in her joys. Think of four years of that sort of thing!

But, after all, the most serious grievance appears to be the total lack of privacy inflicted upon the occupants of the executive mansion. It is bad enough, as Mr. Harrison avers, to have to work in the same house that you eat and sleep in, with no interval of open air and blue sky between your bedroom and your office—they are adjoining rooms in the house where the President has to live. The whole of the lower part of the house, except a dining room, is given over to the general public. That portion of the second floor which is devoted to business is, of course, shared with them. And so it is that if there is some very important work on hand the President is forced to take refuge in his sleeping apartment!

The grounds about the White House share in the publicity of its interior. The driveway in front of it is a public thoroughfare. The walks about it are perfectly free to every chance comer. There are high fences all around it, but as the gates stand wide open these can be regarded as mere ornaments. A portion of the grounds, those lying south of the house, are locked at night—and the inhabitants of the capital found fault when that was done. Some of the functions of social life, like the egg-rolling of the Washington children on Easter day, can only take place in the White House grounds. In short, as Mr. Harrison says: "There is not a square foot of ground, not a bench nor a shade tree, that the President and his family can use in privacy."

NOVAK IS FOUND GUILTY.

Jury Returns a Verdict of Murder in the Second Degree.

Frank Novak, on trial at Vinton, Iowa, for killing Edward Murray, has been found guilty of murder in the second degree. The jury returned its verdict recommending that his punishment be ten years in the penitentiary. Counsel for the prisoner said he regarded the verdict a great victory for the defense.

A serious mistake on the part of the State in the proceedings of the trial was discovered at the very last moment, and Novak's counsel fought persistently to prevent its rectification. After the evidence had been closed on both sides it was discovered that the county attorney had omitted to show that the village of Walford, Novak's home and where the tragedy occurred, was in Benton County. County Attorney Tobin requested a short stay in the regular proceedings of the trial until he could go upon the witness stand and swear that the town of Walford was in Benton County that the evidence might be incorporated in the case. Both Attorneys Ney and Milner strongly opposed this plan, but Judge Burnham overruled the objection and permitted the State to make correction of the records. The Charles Wood story from Seattle was exploded. It is alleged that the part Wood played was carefully arranged by Novak's friends.

LINCOLN'S GRANDDAUGHTER

Is a Happy Bride, but Papa Will Not Forgive Her.

Miss Jessie Lincoln, daughter of Col. Robert Lincoln, and granddaughter of the immortal "Abe," is a happy bride, but mingled with her happiness is much sorrow. She is a bright and handsome young woman and a favorite in Chicago society. A few days ago she married without her father's knowledge, a youth named Warren Beckwith. The young husband is a fine-looking fellow, with some means and a liking for athletics. But he has never been thrown on his own resources and therefore has not as yet displayed any business ability. Papa Lincoln was furious when his daughter returned home and told of her marriage. He sternly refused to give her his blessing and the bride left home and is now living with her husband at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. She is deeply in love with Mr. Beckwith and will remain with him, while hoping that her father's heart will relent. But the colonel shows no sign of forgiving her.

IS CAPT. DREYFUS INNOCENT?

All Paris Excited Over a Story of Blackmail and Corruption.

The allegation that Alfred Dreyfus, former captain of French artillery, was falsely accused and convicted by a court martial of selling French military plans to the agents of a foreign government, continues to be widely discussed in Paris and throughout France. The presentation of the prisoner's case to the French Government, which caused the present agitation, reveals a romance with the "gang" of so-called "journalists" and stock jobbers who beset the late Max Lebaudy, the millionaire conscript.

The plot, it would further seem, was conceived in 1893, when the wave of "Jew baiting" swept over Europe. Dreyfus is of Jewish extraction, and these jackals of Parisian society, casting about for funds, determined to "bleed this wealthy Jew." A beautiful adventuress, whose house was the resort of a number of French officers and foreign diplomats, is said to have acted as the go-between in these transactions.

By invitation Dreyfus was a frequent visitor to her house. In due course of time the plan for the mobilization of the French army, which had been drawn up in a handwriting which cleverly imitated that of Dreyfus, was produced and money was demanded for its surrender. Dreyfus, however, it is said, refused to pay the sum demanded, knowing that the purchase of the document would be an admission of his guilt and would furnish ground for future extortion, and being aware that the fact that he had been friendly toward the woman, who herself was a party to the plot, would be considered part of the strongest evidence of his guilt.

Friends of Dreyfus assert that the newspapers have constantly maintained a warfare against Dreyfus, even up to the present time, and that in consequence the prisoner's wife and family are obliged to keep secluded.

Alfred Dreyfus is now enduring the most terrible punishment inflicted by a civilized nation upon a human being. Four years ago he was a rich, brilliant Parisian, a captain in the army, attached to the general staff. Suddenly he was arrested and without legal procedure condemned by a council of war to exile for life in French Guiana. He was charged with betraying French military plans to a foreign government, understood to be the German. The sole evidence against him was a brief note, alleged to have been found in the waste paper basket of the German embassy.

Although the trial of Dreyfus was absolutely secret, his condemnation was of the most public character conceivable. The unfortunate man was taken to the Champ de Mars, the largest parade ground in Paris, where 4,000 troops were drawn up in line. Dreyfus stood in the midst of them. After the judgment of the council of war had been read, a lieutenant took the sword of Dreyfus and broke it across his knee, and then cut the buttons, epaulets and other marks of military rank from him.

Then he was sent to his place of exile, the Devil's Island, off the coast of French Guiana, in South America. There yellow fever is permanent. On this island he is condemned to spend the rest of his life, watched day and night by three old soldiers, not one of whom may ever speak to him. Latterly his hut has been inclosed in a large iron cage, in order that all possibility of escape may be removed. Compared to this the life imprisonment of an ordinary criminal is merciful. Dreyfus is certainly being tortured to death.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

A Mysterious Murder at Ligonier—Muncie Gambling House Raided—Dog Chewed Three Men—End of the Washington Strike.

Murder at Ligonier.

John Earle came to Ligonier from Buffalo and set up a shoe repairing shop, in which he roomed. The other morning he was found dead in his shop with contusions on his head. All the furniture was upset and there was blood on the wall.

Three Men Chewed by a Dog.

A vicious bulldog at Seymour attacked Charles Ormsby on the street and badly chewed both his hands. Thomas Stewart, owner of the brute, was also bitten, and Marshal Thicksten had his garments torn before the dog was killed. The dog was shot with a revolver, hit in the head with an ax and received the contents of a shotgun before being laid out.

Muncie Gamblers Arrested.

Police made a raid on McCoy's gambling rooms and arrested a dozen patrons, confiscating the furniture. A score of other places had in some manner secured a "tip" and were closed, many having moved out. The city has been "easy" for some time, and the action caused a sensation in sporting circles.

Robbed of Her Rings.

Mrs. Albert Mustard of Lafontaine was alone in her house the other night, when a tramp entered. She offered him food, but he refused it, and, grasping her hands, demanded money, at the same time stripping her fingers of gold rings which she wore. He escaped.

Verdict Against a Careless Company.

The New Hampshire Fire Insurance Company has received judgment against the Natural Gas Company of Crawfordsville for $470. The gas company did not have a night man to watch the gas pressure and from a red hot stove a house burned.

Indiana Strike Over.

The Wilsons' coal strike at Washington was amicably settled and the men returned to work. A very slight advance was made in the price paid for entry air breaks. The Cabel trouble is still on, with no hopes of settlement.

Young Woman Hangs Herself.

Jennie Belle Woods hanged herself in the barn of William Crider, three miles from Greenfield. No cause is known for the suicide.

All Over the State.

While attending an oyster supper at Burrows, William Mirracle accidentally shot and killed his brother, Adam Mirracle.

The work of laying the steel on the gas belt electric railway being built by Congressman Henry Philip Matter and others, has been begun. All material is on the ground, and cars will be running into Alexandria by Dec. 15 and into Summitville by New Year's. The grading from Anderson to Alexandria is completed.

"O,

Is thy cruse of comfort wasting? Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine
it shall serve thee and thy brother.
Love divine will fill thy storehouse, or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one will often make a royal meal for two:
For the heart grows rich in giving; all its wealth is living grain:
Seeds that mildew in the garner, scattered fill with gold the plain.

THE OUTCAST.

Lilian Fernlie sat in her luxurious little boudoir, one sunny afternoon, lost in gloomy meditation.

When a young girl in the zenith of her youth and beauty, blessed with a superabundance of all worldly advantages, and surrounded by myriads of devoted relatives and friends, sits brooding alone, the inevitable conclusion is that she is secretly fretting over the delinquencies of some man The man in this case was well born and well bred, wealthy and distinguished in his profession. For five years he had courted her society assiduously, showered gifts upon her, spoken to her tenderly—done everything, in short, except ask her to be his wife."

"Why, why, why?"

Yes, Gilbert Carlowe's glance, his touch, his voice, all told her that he loved her, and yet he put her resolutely from him. She felt this instinctively.

Lilian threw herself back into her chair, and cried long and bitterly. She was contemplating her tear disfigured face in the mirror when her maid tapped at the door.

"Come in," she said, huskily.

"If you please, Miss, Mr. Carlowe is in the drawing-room, and bega you will favor him with a few words at once."

"I cannot go to him like this, Leonard," her mistress cried, facing her in dismay.

"Dear me, miss! Are you ill?"

"No, no!" cried Lilian impatiently. "Make me as presentable as you can."

The maid brought some eau de cologne and water to bathe her flushed face, and with a few deft touches made her pretty white gown the perfection of neatness. All was done in a few minutes.

Lilian was only a little paler than was quite natural to her, and the great blue eyes a trifle dim, when she opened the drawing room door. But he noticed it at once.

"I fear you are not well, Miss Fernlie," he said, as he came eagerly forward with outstretched hand.

She put her hand in his for one brief moment.

"There is nothing serious the matter with me," she said, as she took a chair and motioned him to one opposite. 'I have been a little upset, that is all."

"I am grieved to hear it."

"Thank you."

Silence followed, during which they both diligently studied the carpet.

"I wonder," he began, breaking the awkward pause, "whether what I am about to say will cause you one-half the pain, Miss Fernlie, that it has caused, is causing, and ever will cause me. You have given me no reason to think that it will, and yet—forgive me—I cannot help hoping so."

The beautiful pale face opposite him flushed. The hesitating words: "I wonder whether"—"you have given me no reason to think"—were music to her ears.

She inclined her head for him to go on.

"Will you listen to the story of my life, Miss Fernlie?" he asked. "May I presume upon your goodness to burden you with a sad tale? I did so want a little sympathy and encouragement to go on doing my duty. May I look for both from you?"

"Yes, Mr. Carlowe," she said, quietly; "you have both from me."

Without a moment's pause he plunged into his narrative.

"I am not what I seem, Miss Fernlie," he said. "You believe me to be Gilbert Carlowe, the only child of the late Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe, of Carlton Gardens, London. In reality my name is Joseph Brown, and I was once a beggar boy in the streets of London whom Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe—God bless them!—picked up and reared because I bore a resemblance to their son."

He paused and raised his eyes reluctantly to her face. He longed to see what effect his confession was having upon her, and yet he could not help shrinking from putting his doubts to the proof.

The shock of the truth had dyed her face crimson, but her dilated eyes met his as frankly and as kindly as of old.

"Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe lived in London for some time after their marriage. One winter's evening (when their boy, Gilbert, was about ten years old) they were walking home, the child on the other side of his mother, when I, attracted by Mrs. Carlowe's benevolent face, stopped her and begged of her earnestly. I was in rags and cold and hungry. My miserable condition would have touched that tender heart under any circumstances, I am sure, but I doubt if it would have procured me more than a few pitying words, and the money wherewith to refresh and clothe myself, if it had not been backed by the fact that I was startlingly like her little son.

"The moment I attracted their attention, both husband and wife started and exchanged glances. 'Like Gilbert!' they said simultaneously; and then they turned involuntarily from contemplating the ragged, barefoot, attenuated little urchin, crying from cold and hunger, and looked at their son. The contrast between us was the key that opened the portals of an undreamed of life for me.

"They questioned me. All I could tell them was that my name was Joseph Brown, and that I was nine years old; that my parents (both working people) had recently died and left me to the care of my mother's sister; that my aunt had a large family of her own to work for, and, not liking the additional incubus, sent me out to beg for my living. They took my address, and promised that I should see them on the morrow.

"The next day they appeared in our squalid dwelling, and offered to relieve my aunt of any further care and anxiety on my account, by adopting me. She gladly accepted their offer. They took me away with them at once; and after I had been humanized by some weeks of Mr. Carlowe's supervision, they sent me to an excellent boarding school near London, where they had placed their son."

"Gilbert Carlowe and I remained at that school eight years; then he went to Oxford, and after Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe had kindly discussed my future with me, I was sent to a college in Paris to learn the ins and outs of business and to become conversant with the language. I remained there for a year, and then Mr. Carlowe came over, introduced me to a prominent firm, and got me a good position, with every chance of promotion if I showed myself deserving. It was a splendid start in life for a young man of eighteen who had sprung from the gutter. On the second anniversary of my connection with the firm, Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe came to Paris, and they brought me startling news. Their son—just of age—had come into a fortune left him by an uncle, had thrown up his professional career (he was studying for the bar), and set off to the wilds of western America to enjoy life according to his own fancy. His deserted parents had come to Paris to live; for old friends and familiar scenes but kept their grief alive, and in their bitter disappointment they turned to me—for was I not their second son?

"One year passed—two, and they received no tidings of him; and then I saw that their hearts were gradually hardening against him. Two more years of silence dawned and closed, and, in their hearts, they were done with him forever. The next year brought the news of his sudden death in the form of an illiterate letter from some obscure person with whom he had been associated in his last days. To my surprise his decease was not made public, and very soon afterwards I was called to hold a private conference with his parents, and told the reason why.

"I was told to take the dead man's name and position, and follow his footsteps to the bar. Joseph Brown's obscure origin might injure him professionally and socially; Gilbert Carlowe's would bear the closest investigation. He had repudiated their love; I had repaid it to the best of my ability, and I was now to reap my reward. Their interest and pleasure in life was henceforth centered in me. In the eyes of the world I should be their son in name and position as well as in heart, and, with my ability and integrity, I was to apply the antidote to all the disappointment their own flesh and blood had made them suffer, by enabling them to say, when by these means I had made myself famous: 'He is our son.'

"What right had I to question the policy of their design? My life was theirs to do what they pleased with.

"Well, Mr. Carlowe had an interview with his old friend, the head partner of the firm where I was employed, and explained the case to him. They were sorry to lose me at the firm; I had earned the good opinion of my masters, and my promotion had not been slow. Oh, God, that I had remained there—simple Joseph Brown to the end of my days!"

His emotion made him pause. Lilian's hands were locked fast together. She leaned forward in her chair with drooping head, waiting with painful interest for him to proceed.

"Before we could leave Paris," he went on hastily, "a terrible calamity overtook us in the illness of Mrs. Carlowe. Her death followed speedily, and her husband did not long survive her.

"Before he died, he exacted a solemn vow from me that after his death I would proceed at once to London as his son Gilbert Carlowe (whose identity I was pledged ever afterwards to maintain) and begin my studies for the bar. He showed me his will, in which he bequeathed everything to me as his only son, Gilbert Carlowe. A few days afterwards, I followed him to the grave; and then, with a crushed heart, I set off for England.

"Well, at the age of twenty-five, and in my new character of Gilbert Carlowe, I began to study for the bar. Mrs. Carlowe had always lived a retired life, and Gilbert Carlowe had been a most unsociable fellow, so there was no friend to storm my position. My likeness to him was as strong as ever, and no obstacles presented themselves in my assumption of the role. People merely concluded that Gilbert Carlowe had rejoined his parents in Paris, and had been living there with them. That he should have neglected his professional studies for five years and then taken to them with renewed ardor was set down to his eccentricity. About the time I began my studies, I bought Clifton Park here. The purchase of the place led to the greatest privilege and happiness that has fallen or ever can fall to my lot—the privilege and happiness of knowing you, Miss Fernlie. Well, in due time I was called to the bar, and during the five years I have been in practice success has attended my efforts. This you know, through our friendship of five years. I had just been called to the bar when you returned from finishing your education abroad. Do you remember the dinner your mother gave in honor of your return, and that I was among the guests?"

She half raised her head; a faint glow showed itself on her face.

"Yes," she said; "I have forgotten nothing."

"Miss Fernlie, it was while you were talking to me after our introduction that the sting of my false position first came bitterly home to me. I have felt it in your presence more or less ever since. When we got to know each other better—when—when I began to love you——" He stopped, and then after a little went on. She could not look at him, but she felt his eyes upon her. She hid her face in her hands. "I longed," he went on brokenly, "to unburden my heart of the truth, and thus end our friendship and my misery. But I owed Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe silence. If the thought ever crossed my mind that you might marry Gilbert Carlowe, I shrank from it in horror. No, no! There was a limit to my assumption of his personality, and my love was beyond it. As far as marriage was concerned, Gilbert Carlowe was dead, and the indentity of the outcast has passed out of his keeping. Who was I that I could ask any woman to be my wife? Miss Fernlie, I should have continued to love you silently to the last hour of my life—if the truth had not burst to light and blasted my career and my good name, innocent though I am!"

She raised her hand and looked at him affrightedly. His agony was terrible to see. She had been weeping, for her cheeks were wet with tears, but she was past caring for appearances.

"What has happened?" she asked, shiveringly.

He left his chair, knelt at her feet, and took her cold hands in his.

"The dead man has come to life!" he gasped. "Gilbert Carlowe is in London! He has heard of his parents' death and seen the will—the will leaves, as I have told you, everything to their only son Gilbert Carlowe. He can prove his identity—but there is no need of that. I will gladly hand him over the fortune he covets, now that he has run through his own."

"But the letter!" she cried.

"The letter was a piece of malice on the part of one of his associates. It was written that his patrimony might pass from him, and that he might have trouble in regaining it when he discovered the fraud. But the money is nothing to me; the worst is yet to be told. He has openly declared that I have taken advantage of the likeness between us to fraudulently represent him. This libel has gained general credence. The necessary investigation by the Inner Temple, where I was called to the bar, has followed. I could make no defense. Mr. and Mrs. Carlowe, who would have saved my character, are dead! The partners of the firm I worked for in Paris are dead! There was no one else to appeal to. My account of myself went for nothing, unsupported. I am disbarred—ruined, ruined, ruined!"

It was a dreadful cry to hear. He rose and walked to the window, and stood there, looking vacantly into the garden, until calmness returned to him. Then he approached the girl once more. She was lying nervelessly back in her chair, and her eyes were closed.

"Miss Fernlie," he said, as she started and looked up at him through her tears, "if I had really been Gilbert Carlowe, you alone on earth would have had the power to drive me from you. But Joseph Brown—once more a penniless outcast, with an additional burden to bear in the shape of a stain laid on his lowly name—can only humbly bid you farewell."

Lilian rose. As they looked into each other's white, set face, their hearts seemed to die within them. She put her trembling hand in his. They stood thus for some moments; then he bent his head over her hand, touched it tenderly with his lips, dropped it and turned away. Lilian stood for a second or so where he had left her, absolutely powerless. So this was the end as he saw it! Could she let it be the end, too?

The instant her heart put forth that plea, her lost vitality returned to her. It was a long room, and he had not yet reached the door. She flew past him, and setting her back against it, faced him breathlessly.

"You must make another beginning," she panted. "You have made the name of Gilbert Carlowe famous; now do the same by Joseph Brown."

He laughed bitterly.

"People are not inclined to appreciate ability that has been exhibited under another man's name and backed by another man's wealth," he said. "Besides, I am without present resources, and who will trust me now?"

"I will," she said.

He steadied himself against a neighboring chair and passed his hand across his dazed eyes.

She came nearer to him, and stood with downcast eyes and drooping head, within a few inches of him.

"I love you better than you love me," she said, "for, Carlowe or Brown, you alone on earth have the power to turn me from you. I would rather be your wife than—empress of the world!"

He stood transfigured. Then he clasped his hands resolutely behind him, and spoke to her calmly. She knew the effort it was costing him.

"God bless you," he said. "You are an angel, Miss Fernlie." And then his heart burst all restraints and cried aloud in its bitter anguish. "Oh, Lilian, Lilian, Lilian! If things had only been otherwise!"

She hid her face in her hands and sobbed bitterly.

"I have nothing in the world, Lilian," he said; "my fortune is all gone—my good name is gone—and the doors of my profession are closed against me! At thirty-five years of age I must begin life again; begin it as I began it twenty-six years ago—from the gutter."

"There is no need," she sobbed. "Do not leave me comfortless! I have wealth—build up your fortune with it."

"Never!" he cried. "You will never be any more to me than you are now, unless the day ever comes when I have re-established a name and position, and when the fruit of my labor can gratify all your wants. You can never be any less to me, come what may. But think of it, Lilian! Even when a man begins life with all the enthusiasm and pliability of youth, it takes him years before the success of his efforts justifies him in undertaking the responsibility of others' welfare. I am past early youth—my case is well-nigh hopeless."

She raised her hand and looked at him.

"So you will not marry me?" she said, with the dreadful calmness of despair.

He looked at her as a man looks on some dear dead face before it is shut forever from his sight. "No," he said, "I will not marry you."

She held out her hand. "Good-by," she said wearily.

"Lilian," he said, as he took it in his, "I am only a man—only a weak, selfish, sinful man. May God forgive me for what I am about to say! I feel as if there would be blood on my soul if I ever knew another man had won you for his wife. I want you to dedicate your life to me, even though I may never come to claim you for my own."

"The dedication of my life to you is inevitable," she said.

"Lilian, twenty-six years ago the kiss of a good and beautiful woman led to the transforming of a ragged, starving urchin into a wealthy, distinguished man. That man, through no fault of his own, finds himself, after years of success, back in the gutter again. Will you make him see his future hopefully through his remembrance of the past?"

She put her arms round him and kissed him.

He held her to him for one brief moment, put her hurriedly from him, and left her without one backward glance.

In her London house one May evening, some six years later, Mrs. Fernlie was holding one of her much sought after receptions. Lilian, more beautiful and more popular than ever, sat regally provided with a little court of her own. But although she dispensed her favors with her usual grace and tact, her thoughts were far away from her surroundings. Her mind would run on that May day afternoon—it seemed so long ago—when she and Joseph Brown had parted. They had not met since, but he had written to her often. She knew that he had gone to London immediately after leaving her, and with great difficulty had obtained employment. In a year's time he had saved enough to go out to Australia. He had managed to associate himself with a mercantile house out there, where his old Paris experiences had proved of the greatest service to him. He was doing well—wonderfully well. His leisure hours were devoted to journalism; he had written a book that had won him praise. Up to seven weeks ago, she had heard from him regularly. Since then she had had no news, and she was racked with anxiety.

A little stir by the door attracted her attention. Her mother was warmly greeting a tardy guest. Lilian's heart bounded as her eyes fell on him.

He came to her instantly. Their hands met, but neither spoke. He drew her away from the crowd into a quiet corner.

"I wanted to surprise you, my darling," he said. "I have come for you. Are you ready?"

She looked up at him with a happy smile.

"Quite," she said.

VICTIMS OF GOITER.

It is Brought On in Portions of Europe by Drinking Snow Water.

This valley of the Rhone has been quite noted for its goiter victims, although I am happy to say that, through the increased watchfulness of the authorities, there now is an abatement of the disease. Many different causes are assigned to the terrible affliction—this enlargement of the glands of the throat, goiter, or "big neck," as it is sometimes called—and even the best informed are far from being unanimous as to its origin or prevention. The peasants themselves say it is brought on by the habitual use of snow and glacial water. The water is so cold it acts as a counter-irritant, and so inflames the throat; but this explanation hardly holds, as the inhabitants of the upper regions are not so often afflicted as are the people in the lower valleys. The use of chemically impure water, especially hard water, is given as a cause.

The experiment has been made where the water of certain wells was used to the exclusion of all other water. Within a short time goiter symptoms began to manifest themselves where none had been before. Sometimes this disease is epidemic. An instance was noted where in a garrison one out of every twenty men became afflicted. Infants are seldom born with goiter, but after it once takes hold the progress of the disease is very rapid. I believe that it is rarely fatal, but because of this enlargement of the glands, and the consequent disfigurement of the throat, it is most repulsive; and yet the natives are so accustomed to seeing it that they do not seem to care. It probably is simply a source of discomfort rather than mortification. In fact, in some portions of France, Italy and Switzerland a goiter is a thing to be prized and to be exhibited, for its possession exempts a man from military service. Young men have been known to resort to certain wells supposed to convey this poison to the blood that they might evade conscription. When Savoy was annexed to France vigorous measures were adopted to stamp out if possible this hateful disease. There was a heavy penalty for drinking the water of forbidden wells, and then the little children were treated in the hope of curing them. Lozenges of iodine were administered, and out of 5,000 children 2,000 were cured, and more would have been helped had not the parents ignorantly opposed the giving of the remedies. The villages also were cleaned and sanitary measures insisted upon. For, aside from all other causes, it is quite agreed that goiter may be transmitted or be sporadic. Like diphtheria, it is a filth disease, and often has its origin in the negligent habits of the villagers. These peasants refuse to live elsewhere than in the old "dorfer" (villages), each morning going far away to the fields, but returning at night to their overcrowded homes, where men, women and children, cows, goats and donkeys dwell together fraternally.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Kerosene in India.

Several steamers have recently entered the Hoogly River for Calcutta, laden with full cargoes of kerosene oil from Sumatra. This trade is said to be absolutely a new one, and the petroleum is in great favor in China and on the Malay peninsula, where it is displacing Russian oil. Kerosene oil is now used in Russia not only for lighting purposes, but for railway locomotives and steamers, and consequently India is looking out for another source of the product, as the oil is used very largely by the natives of India, and is displacing the ordinary vegetable oil of the country.

Ancient Scandinavian Graves.

Professor Heydeck, of Konigsberg, has discovered graves of the seventh and eighth centuries, evidently of Scandinavian origin, in East Prussia. In one he found a silver-pommeled, cross-hilted sword, a pair of stirrups, two lances, one of them with silver ornaments, an iron shield boss, three spurs, a pair of scissors, a grindstone and the remnants of an iron pail. In others were found two oval dishes richly ornamented, a third of a form hitherto unknown, bronze bells like sledge bells, and sundry other articles.

HENRY GEORGE'S DAUGHTER.

UP to last May Henry George's constant companion at home, next to his wife, was his daughter Jennie, who acted as his amanuensis. At that time the young woman died, and it is not believed that the famous single taxer ever fully recovered from the shock caused by his bereavement. The vacant place was taken by his remaining daughter, Anna, who has been giving some recollections, childish and otherwise, of her dead father. Anna George is a peculiarly gentle-looking girl, with a mass of golden-red hair framing her not particularly pretty face.

"Though my father was not what is generally known as a religious man," said Miss George, "he was always preaching the religion of humanity. When I was a little child in San Francisco I was very delicate, and when I woke up in the night nobody could quiet me but him. He had his own views on education and would not allow us to bring books home from school, saying that when we left school it was to play, not study. Mother was his adviser and critic in all things. He never undertook anything without first consulting her. Her judgment, her advice, he placed above anyone's. This was true not only in business, but in his literary work. Hers was the only praise he envied. She traveled with him and thought of his health and comfort as she would a child's."

Struggling to Save Her Race.

Mary Lucinda Kimiens, at present in Philadelphia, is a native-born African, who came to this country about a year ago to learn more of the ways of civilization and carry them back to her people. Mary was taken to work in the family of a missionary when she was 4 years old. Her parents died and she determined to come to the United States and learn what she could about manual training and return to her people. Mary saved $150 in four years. She received only $1 a month for work as a domestic in the dark continent, so it took a long time to earn her passage money. She arrived in this country without a cent, but has succeeded in getting work. She says that white missionaries will never be able to do anything with colored people. They need members of their own race as missionaries. Her home is in Liberia.

Trimmed Skirts in Favor.

Trimmed skirts are multiplying in numbers daily, and the liking for them begins to increase in proportion. As yet there has appeared none of the former intricacies in the adjustment or arrangement of the decorations, as they simply include flat gimps, braiding, bands of silk cord applique, resembling either embroidery or braidwork in their designs; small ruches, lines of narrow velvet ribbon, fur edgings, silk-woven medallions or Vandykes, milliner's folds, beaded ornaments and stitched bands—each and all appear as decorations on the front, sides, and around the hems of new dress skirts for the winter.

Flounces on the Sleeves.

Bell-shaped or pelerine flounces are added to the tops of close coat-shaped sleeves on some of the new wraps and fancy jackets. These are bound and bordered with rows of braid, and when of velvet they are fur trimmed and silk or satin lined, to match the lining of the jacket. The flounces reach the elbow, and they are particularly becoming to slender figures, as they greatly mitigate the outlining effect of the tight coat sleeve on over-slim arms.

When Making Calls.

When a call is made on the hostess' "day at home" no card is sent in. In leaving the caller puts on the hall tray her card and one of her husband's for the hostess and each gentleman in the house. Only in making a business call is it necessary for a woman to send in her card or when she calls some time other than the hostess' regular day for receiving.

Piano Practice.

There exists a diversity of opinion as to the number of hours a pupil should practice each day. Here is what a writer in the Etude says on the subject: Concentration is absolutely necessary to the successful student, and if you find you lack in this particular then pull yourself together and work with the determination that you must and will gain concentration. When this is gained, you will discover that you can now accomplish in two hours what you could not accomplish before in a whole day. Four hours now will be sufficient to tire you mentally, and the rest of your time may be profitably spent in the open air, perhaps on a bicycle. If you have a fine, grand piano, take pleasure in playing on it, listen to the tones produced and enjoy them. Do not merely sit there from a sense of duty, compelling yourself to play just so many hours. Enjoy your practice, and you will find yourself improving musically and mentally. More than four hours a day is injurious to the average pupil.

New Petticoats.

Silk petticoats usually indicate the trend of fashion in dress skirts. The new ones are made narrow at the top and not very full in front, and many of them have a succession of wide ruffles up the back. This would indicate that dress skirts are expected to stand out at the back, and may bring in its train the haircloth bustle, which reaches from the waist to the bottom of the skirt. The newest material for long petticoats is wool moreen. It comes in dark checks and stripes. Five yards make a skirt, and less may be used if one cares to trim it with silk ruffles. A fine red-and-blue check is one of the prettiest patterns, and trimmed with either red or blue taffeta ruffles it would make an extremely pretty petticoat, cheaper and much more durable than silk—cheaper because it is wider.

Governor Margaret Reeve.

For years past Miss Margaret Reeve has held responsible positions in various departments of the State government of Idaho. As a crowning triumph she recently completed a two weeks' term as chief executive of the State. Miss Reeve is at present private secretary to Mr. Lewis, Secretary of State. Recently Governor Stennenberg and Mr. Lewis were called from Boise City to the northern part of the State on business of the utmost importance. The Governor was at a loss who to leave in charge of affairs, but finally, at the suggestion of Mr. Lewis, decided that Miss Reeve would acceptably "run the machine" until his return. Accordingly the young lady was left at the statehouse clothed with full gubernatorial authority, which she exercised in a manner that not only gave satisfaction to the Governor, but has won for her great distinction. Miss Reeve may not have fully comprehended the responsibilities thrust upon her before the departure of the Governor, but she took hold of official business like an old hand.

Devoted to Gardening.

Landscape gardening is a passion with Miss Edna Sutermeister of St. Louis. So devoted is she to this kind of work that she purposes following it as a profession, and with this end in view she is studying botany, flowers, shrubs and landscape gardening in Washington university, St. Louis. She was always fond of botany while at school, going out on excursions into the country, with her class, and was eager in studying plant life. She believes that in her profession there are great opportunities for women. Her friends are amazed when they hear of what she is doing. She is the only girl in her class at the university, but she does her work as well, as artistically and with as much pleasure as any boy. She is the only graduate of the Kansas City high school, boy or girl, who ever dreamed of following this occupation.

MISS SUTERMEISTER.

Every morning Miss Sutermeister goes to Shaw's garden where she is superintendent of two greenhouses, and where she directs arrangement and care of the flowers. She has two men working under her in each greenhouse and her work is done thoroughly and well.

Use an Undercloth.

Never put a tablecloth over a bare table. It never looks as well, and an undercloth brings out the pattern of the damask. Another thing, it deadens sound and prevents the hot dishes from making disfiguring white marks on the polished top of your table. Double-faced canton flannel is much more satisfactory than felt.

THE SOUL OF WIT.

Deacon Thought Brevity a Good Thing in Sermons.

Among the very many good and excellent people who reside in the quaint and delightful old town of Alexandria, Va., is a deacon, who, notwithstanding his great piety, is a man of practical common sense and believes in the expediency of things, just as some of his illustrious predecessors in Testament times did. Among those things which he considers of especial commendation is brevity in sermons, and the minister of the church at which the deacon attended was always known as a short-sermon man, and his congregation was always correspondingly long.

On one occasion it is narrated that the deacon, when the church last needed a pastor, went to the theological seminary of the proper denomination to hear some of the young men preach, if so be among them might be one who would find favor in the deacon's sight. It being some extra service of the church, there was preaching on Saturday and Sunday, and the deacon had on opportunity to hear several sermons. Sunday evening at tea the president of the seminary asked the deacon what he thought of the sermons he had heard.

"Um—er—um," hesitated the deacon, "I can't say that I am altogether satisfied, doctor."

"Why, bless my soul, deacon, what's wrong?" exclaimed the president, in astonishment.

"Well, they don't seem to quite exactly strike me right," said the good deacon, hedging for charity's sake.

"That is beyond me," continued the president, half musingly, as if he were trying to work the problem out in his mind. "All of them are picked men, deacon; our rising young preachers."

"Is that so?" responded the deacon with a smile of hope showing in his honest face.

"Indeed it is," said the president.

"Then, doctor," smiled the deacon, "suppose you let me hear to-night one of your sitting-down young preachers. I think that's what I'm looking for."

The president understood and the young man who preached that night became pastor of the deacon's church, though he left its pulpit ten years later for a wider field.—Washington Star.

CURIOUS ENGLISH WHEEL.

John Bull's Inventive Genius Produces This Rival of the Bevel Gear.

The inventive genius of an Englishman has produced this rival of the bevel gear. It consists of three wheels. Two of them are for ordinary use and the third furnishes the means of propulsion. The pedals are attached to a gear wheel, which is at the lowest part of the frame. About the side of the gear wheel revolves another and smaller gear wheel which is at the end of what may be called the seat post. There is a similar gear wheel at the other end of the rod. It fits a gear on a large wheel, which runs on an axle supporting the seat post proper. The revolution of the pedals revolves the first gear wheel, revolving the rod and the large wheel. This wheel turns on the periphery of the large road wheel, which drives the bicycle. It is unique if not simple.

A King's Roof Garden.

King Ludwig's historic winter garden on the roof of the royal Residenz Palais in Munich, is being demolished. The weight of the conservatory, with its large lake, giant palms and flower beds, was such that fears were entertained that the roof might fall in, while an ever-present annoyance was the impossibility of keeping the ceilings of the state apartments below in an uninjured condition, owing to perpetual leakage. It is twenty-five years since King Ludwig commanded the garden to be made, and it was his favorite place of resort. He frequently spent the entire night there. Thirty gardeners were kept busy the greater part of the day while the king slept, rearranging the plans and bringing new flowers, so that each time he entered he should find some new charm. The late Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria and Richard Wagner were perhaps the only two guests who were invited more than once to view the retreat where King Ludwig dreamed dreams and so mitigated the misery of his madness.

Consolation.

"An' hoo's the guid wife, Sandy?" said one farmer to another, as they met in the market place and exchanged snuff boxes.

"Did ye no hear that she's dead and buried?" said Sandy solemnly.

"Dear me!" exclaimed the friend sympathetically. "Surely it must have been very sudden?"

"Aye, it was sudden," returned Sandy. "Ye see, when she turned ill we hadna time to send for the doctor, sae I gied her a bit pouther that I had lying in my drawer for a year or twa, an' that I had frae the doctor mysel', but hadna ta'en. What the pouther was I dinna verra weel ken, but she died soon after. It's a sair loss to me, I can assure ye, but it's something to be thankfu' for I didna tak' the pouther mysel'."

Beetles Ate the Lead.

That certain beetles are by no means frightened by lead foil has long been recognized, but it is rather discouraging to add one more to the number of these culprits. Ed Stich of Nauheim reports that a box somewhat worm eaten was lined with lead. After a while holes one-eighth of an inch in diameter, and distinctly spiral, were noticed and traced to the beetle Tetroplum luridum, Linn., which was not yet on the list of lead eaters, or rather lead destroyers.

A cousin of this insect has been known to be destructive to lead chambers. There are, unfortunately, many insects and animals devoid of that sense for the sacred rights of property which we expect of everybody but ourselves.—Scientific American.

LAFOLLETTE'S FIGHT.

Many of our people and especially our teachers will remember Ex-State Superintendent, Lafollette. He has lately become quite conspicous for the efforts he is making in the U. S. Courts to secure title to lands on the famous "Lake Front" in Chicago. The original "McKee Scrip" granted by government was attempted to be put on "unclaimed lands" along the lake front, hoping to get thereby not the lands and lots already occupied, but the additions being made thereto by filling into the lake. The McKee Scrip calls for 160 acres and two men Matt Benner and Lafollette own it. Some courts have decided for them and some against them. Twice it has been before the Secretary of the Interior, and soon will be again. It may have to be settled by law of congress. But if the men get even a few acres of that filled land, they will be millionaires.

U. S. EXPRESS CO. CASE.

It is not generally known that a very important and interesting case of litigation beteen the United States Express Company and some parties in the State of Virginia, has been in progress for some time. About the years 1890 to 1893 parties in Lynchburg, Va. styling themselves as "the Lone Jack Cigar and Tobacco Co," or "F. M. Threagill Cigar and Tobacco Co." commenced shipping cigars, generally about 100 in a package to merchants all over the United States and Canada. The goods were sent without orders to these merchants and were of a very cheap quality, but billed at $65.00 per thousand. Each package had printed instructions that the goods should in no case be returned without orders to do so by the shipper. As was to be expected nearly all these goods were refused by the merchants and left in the hands of the Express Co. Instructions were then asked for and the Cigar company would keep on making reductions in price till a part of the goods were sold for less than half what they were originally billed at. Later F. M. Threadgill commenced suit in U. S. Court at Lynchburg against the U. S. Express Co. for very large damages for the non delivery of these goods. A jury trial was had and the Express Co. contested it as hardly as they deemed necessary but was surprised when the jury returned a judgment for plaintiff for $54,000. From this judgement the company ordered an appeal and later got the judgement set aside and a new trial given on the ground that the jury had been tampered with. On the 22 of this month, November, Issac Speer U. S. Express Agent at Waterloo was called to Toledo, O., to give testimony in the above case. Agents and merchants from the various points in Ohio and Indiana were there to give evidence. The officers of the express company have 'rolled up their sleeves,' and gone to work in earnest and neither time nor expense will be spared to make them the winners in the next suit to be tried in the United States Court in Lynchburg, Va., in December '97. The outcome of this suit will be watched for with much interest all over the country.

BLADDER TROUBLES

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, a receptancle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfect action of the kidneys. The second way is from careless local treatment of other diseases.

SAMPLE SENT FREE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder troubles. It is comforting to know that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root fulfills every wish in quickly curing bladder and urinary troubles It corrects frequent calls, inability to hold urine and scalding or stinging pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention Auburn Courier and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

A DEAD ENGINE

Stands Now on the Lake Shore Siding.

The engine of the south bound passenger train is on the siding perfectly dead. As they pulled into the station this forenoon a flue burst and allowed the steam and water to escape. She was pushed back and the siding and all the water left out of the tank to prevent it from freezing. An engine was telegraphed for and arrived at about 11:30 and the passengers were then carried on to their destination.

FREE TRIP TO CINCINNATI

A. P. Green, Will Elson and A. W. Bates left last night for Cincinnati going via Waterloo and Toledo. They go there to select quarters for the DeKalb Battallion during the G. A. R encampment next year. They were furnished free transportation over the railways, one day free entertaiment at Cincinnati and half rates during the remainder of their stay, free transportation on the street cars and a free ticket to the theater. We don't know what more they could expect on the free list.

As To Shade Trees.

I. M. Johnson has been finishing up the fall delivery of fruit and ornamental trees by delivering some fine shade trees. Some of these may be seen at Tom Hallam's residence on West Seventh-st. Here are two or three catalpas, but the most of them are of the variety of soft maples, known as "Wear's cut leaf Maple." They are a variety of our fine shade maples, but are grown in nurseries and are therefore more easily transplanted, and are more certain to grow. A great number of them will be seen here next year.

NEW BALLAST FOR ROADS.

At Brubaker, Ill, is in operation, a new industry. The dig up up the peculiar kind of clay they call "gumbo," which resembles the gumbo beds farther west in the Missouri valley, and this they bake in kilns and break it up into sizes suitable for making roads and for ballasting on railroads. The C. B. & Q. road has a plant of its own and has ballasted several hundred miles with it. It is cheaper than broken stone, or even gravel, and cleaner. Its use is growing.

FIFTY-THREE YEARS TODAY

On Saturday, Nov. 30, 1844, Dr. J. H. Ford, first saw Auburn. He arrived here that evening across the country from his old home at Plymouth, Ohio. On reaching the little village, he naturally rode up to the "store" and the clerk thereof, whose name was John Butt, came out to receive him and give him welcome. It was the store of Thomas Freeman of which the earlier pioneers often speak. Dr. Ford felt that he was in a new and strange country. And an incident of next morning, pressed him still further of this fact. Rather early that morning, Sunday, Dec. 1, he saw two men coming in out of the nearby forest, with a deer slung on a pole and carried between them. The men were Jonathan Puffenberger, then sheriff, and a hunter named David Harris. It was a big deer, and they had with little trouble, got it in the early morning. It might not be amiss to name some of the other officers at that time, Jacob Helwig was representative; Wesley Park, treasurer; S. W. Sprott, clerk; D. B. Herriman State Senator; Aaron Hague, auditor; Andrew Kennedy, "the Hoosier Blacksmith was congressman, and Samuel Bigger governor and Jesse D. Bright lieutenant-governor, James K. Polk had just been, Nov. 4, elected president.

BUTLER.

Andrew S. Casebeer has purchased one of the McLewis' dwellings on North Pearl street and will occupy it with his daughter, Mrs. Jemima McCurdy.

In the matter of the settlement of the Dills loss in last week's COURIER the type made me say $5.50, when it should have said $1550.

J. A. Campbell and Geo R. Flood special for the Home Insurance Co. of New York, visited Metz and Angola last Wedesday.

But a small number of our citizens gathered at the M. E. church on Thanksgiving day to attend the service and hear Rev. Dustman in one of his happiest efforts.

Mrs. J. A. Campbell's sister, Lizzie Champion is confined to her room by a stubborn illness.

Rumor has it that Miss Lillie Wanemaker, one of Butler's most fascinating young ladies has been quietly married to Herbert Mudd.

Our town trustees have passed a curfew ordinance, we hope it will be rigidly enforced, and the boys and girls kept in doors after eight o'clock When we have acquired a moderate degree of success at it let us try the same medicine for the full grown boys and girls that make late hours their especial time for wandering on the darker streets.

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Geo. Squires on East Green-st last Thursday evening. It was the marriage of their daughter, Laura, to Dr. E. V. Campbell, of Waterloo, Rev. Dustman of the Lutheran church officiating. There were present only the immediate friends of contracting parties. They will make their home in Waterloo, where the Doctor has beenp racticing for a few months.

The M. E. friends continue their revival effort with moderate success.

Mr. Morley is adding a large addition to his residence on the south side.

Amasa Blanchard has sold his south side residence to a Mr. Slusser, a section foreman.

Geo Blaker son of David Blaker has rented John Hook's farm and will move there soon. He and his father recently sold their flocks of sheep for $1700. What about prosperity?

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble is the common name applied to a derangement of the system which is keenly felt but vaguely understood. It may mean inability to retain food or to digest it. It may mean nausea, pain after eating, fullness, inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. Whatever it means, there's trouble, and it's with the stomach. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, and spent large sums of money, all in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—CALVIN M. STEVENS, Uniontown, Pa.

AT WATERLOO.

While at Waterloo the other day, we called briefly into a number of business rooms long enough to give a handshake to old friends and a glance over their business places. All seem to be doing as well as the average in their lines, and we must say they are keeping their stores etc. in the nicest possible shape. This is especially true of the new stores in the new block that took the place of those destroyed by fire. The citizens Bank and H. K. Leas' dwelling connected with it, are models of neatness and comfort. Boyer & Co. and D. L. Leas each have fine rooms and fine new stocks. We found at the latter place, Frank Fisher and F. N. Beidler as clerks. The old Darby Block is now new and longer than before, and occupied by a nice drug store. In the east end of it is again the postoffice, nearly where it had been for so many years. The present postmaster, Mr. Williamson and his wife do all the work and it is done well of course and the office is neat and orderly. Mrs. W. has missed but half a day since they got the office. We found Mrs. Will Leas' store full of fine goods in her line of work, but the proprietor was not in. A brief call on Gruetor Brothers, showed them busy as usual, and the same was true at the grocery of Speer & Co. Mr. S. himself was at the teachers' meeting. J. Lowenstein we visited for a few moments and found him at his post as usual. Here we met Miss Nettie Chamberlain, who has been a clerk there for some time. We met Bro. Willis in his neat new place of business, the neatest in the county if we except the new COURIER office. And there were many others we met but their names and those we met at the Institute, have got lost in the crowd. It was altogether a pleasant visit.

NEW AIR LINE.

Every few years there is a revival of the plan to build an air line railroad from Chicago to New York. It has started up again. This time the proposed line leaves the Illinois Central at Kankakee, Ill., and comes east between the "3 I's" road we used to be interested in and the Lake Erie & Western. And on reaching Fort Wayne, it may use the line of the Ft. Wayne & Findlay road, a short line between those places. The object of the new line to give the Illinois Central an outlet direct to New York. It already has great trunk lines into Chicago from the far south, northwest and west, and such a line as the proposed one would make them another big line to the sea board. They have interested heavy capitalists, like the Astors and the plan has plenty of money backing. All across Indiana it runs on a level country, including the great Kankakee marshes, and they intend to have only the easiest grades so that as a freight line, their work can be cheaply done. Just at present it looks as if a "Chicago and New York Air Line" was a pretty sure thing, and at an early date.

REASON ENOUGH.

The Steuben Republican says the commissioners of DeKalb county, have concluded to stop prosecuting people for supposed connection with the late troubles here over bad county orders. Then it asks if they are going to take the work of the court into their own hands. Well, we don't know as to that, but we do know how they feel about the more recent of these prosecutions. It is well illustrated by a story that Judge McClellan sometimes tells:

Some years ago, when the famous story about the "Forty Thieves," had been dramatized and was being played to big houses in the lerger cities, a stranger called one evening at the box office of a certain theater to buy a ticket, so he could tell the people at home he had heard this great drama. He expected it would cost him 25 or 50 cents, and gave the ticket seller a $5 bill. The ticket man handed out the ticket and $3.50 in change, the price being $1.50. The stranger was nearly paralyzed at the price, but took the ticket and the change, clapped them into his pocket and struck for the street "Hello! Come back," siad the ticket seller. "Don't you want to see the famous play, 'Forty Thieves?'" "Not by a d——d sight" responded the stranger, "at least I don't want to see the other 39."

This may or may not throw any light on the feelings of the commissioners since facing the expenses in the recent trials. Still the story has a moral.

GERMANY VS HAYTI.

The Germans are sending an armed force to make right, as they claim, an insult offered to a German subject by the authorities of Hayti. The facts in the case are rather against the German who complains, but that is a matter the two governments can settle to suit them. If it is shown that there was an insult or an injury then the German government has a right to ask the usual and proper apology and money damage. All nations have this right and all exercise it. But if instead of proceeding in this usual and friendly way, the Kaiser sends an armed force and seizes a Haytien city or a portion of Haytien territory and holds it, that is quite another thing. It will then become the duty of the U. S. government to interfere, for the rights of this nation under the now accepted Monroe Doctrine are very plain and there should be no hesitation on our part. If thsre had been any doubt as to the attitude of the United States on this important international principle the very clear and forcible statement made by President Cleveland to Great Britain and substantially acquiesced in by the latter great power, should set all doubt at rest and prevent any hesitation on our part. The matter was discussed by this nation and Great Britain in a friendly way in connection with the quarrel between that country and Venezuela. There was no bullying, for each is a strong nation and able to take care of itself It was practically agreed that our ideas of the Monroe Doctrine were right, and that "No European or other foreign nation would be considered as having a right to acquire any new territory in the new world. "This would include North and South America and all the islands belonging thereto. If now the Germans should attack a weak people like the Republic of Hayti and bully them into parting with a city or a harbor or any slice of territory, it would be the plain duty of the United States to put a stop to it. We have faith enough in any administration to believe this would be promptly done. We do not apprehend that war would result. Our rights in the matter are so plain and have been so plainly set forth that even the excitable young Emperor could not ignore them. But it is to be hoped that the expedition he is sending to Hayti has no other intention than to secure an apology and damages for what he claims was an insult. German ships have already seized a port in China to secure indemnity for missionaries murdered, but that is a very different matter and in no way interferes with our rights under the Monroe Doctrine. As a nation we may look with disfavor on any injustice done to China, but it has not the same vital interest to us that the trouble in Hayti has. There is one similarity only in the two cases. It is a strong and warlike nation, attempting the part of bully with two weak ones. Hayti is a weak nation substantially of colored people, and China, though she has more people than Germany is not a nation that can fight.

Fresh Air and Consumption.

A French physician has recently expressed the opinion that, with proper regulations, tuberculosis may be restricted within the narrowest bounds and perhaps almost exterminated. This is a conviction founded upon the most thorough and conclusive experimental investigation, confirmed by practical experience. In France a strong effort is being made toward the restriction of the spread of the disease by working on consumptive children through the fresh air treatment, and an institution has been carried on for several years, known as the "Fresh Air Cure for Consumptive Children." Two hospitals for this purpose are situated—one at Ormisson and the other at Villiers-sur-Marne. The medical men interested in this work consider it the most promising method yet employed in trying to reduce the rate of mortality from consumption in France, which in some cities—Paris, Rouen and Havre, for example—is exceedingly high. Medicine forms no part of the treatment, except the occasional use of cod liver oil in the cold season. The work of cure is, therefore, left entirely to fresh air and to the hygienic living of the patients. With the exception of a very few cases, where persistent fever keeps them in bed during the first part of their stay in the hospital, all the patients are obliged to follow the regular system of living. They rise early, bathe well, and are dressed in linen garments, loosely fitting. Twice a week, unless otherwise ordered by the physician, each patient is bathed and vigorously rubbed by an attendant. After the toilet the patients eat a light breakfast; this is insisted upon for each child, for suitable and regular meals have proved most necessary in aiding the treatment. After breakfast the children are sent into the garden or park or covered playground, where they enjoy games and exercises, varying with the season. The most serious cases are kept indoors, lying in reclining chairs, well wrapped in warm coverings, and breathing the fresh air admitted into the room. Except for the two principal meals of the day, the entire time is passed in the open air, and the rooms are also ventilated with the greatest possible amount of fresh air. For the last five years the reports as to the condition of the patients have, without the least variation, shown the most satisfactory results, surpassing even the hopes entertained by the founders.

CARRYING THE UMBRELLA.

Conclusive Opinions Formed by Your Fashion of Doing It.

Two men who sat near the window of a hotel in a great city a few days ago whiled away the time by watching the women go by and commenting on their umbrellas.

The storm had abated about an hour before, and the sun had peered through a rift in the clouds, but, for all that, the first pedestrian went stalking past with her umbrella still held aloft.

"That women," said one of the men, "is as patient as Job. She is not a student absent-mindedly poring over book lore, but a housekeeper, who is so taken up with thoughts of what she is going to get for supper that she doesn't know it has stopped raining. What is more, she is thoroughly unselfish. People who forget to lower their umbrellas when the sun begins to shine always are. That girl just behind her, who has already taken time to fold her umbrella neatly, even though it is soaking wet, is going to be an old maid. She is narrow-minded, too. The next one has bound the folds down, but it looks uneven and bulgy. That woman's children will always look dowdy, but she will nurse them successfully through innumerable attacks of croup and rash, and no family in town will have better things to eat. That short woman, with her umbrella flopping this way and that, will always be poor, because she will give away everything as soon as she gets it. Her's isn't altogether a commendable generosity, either, for it is caused more by lack of power to say 'no' than by an inherent desire to help her fellow-creatures. That dark woman with the tip of her umbrella trailing downward and backward at an angle of 45 degrees is malicious. I wouldn't trust her out of my sight. She'd say something mean about me the first chance she got. The one who carries her umbrella swung carelessly over her shoulder is a happy-go-lucky individual, who will always have a good time, not because she earns it, but because the world owes it to her, and she is going to have her rights."

The Finishing Touch.

"Just wait," said the man in the barber shop, "till the brush boy gets ready for the finishing touch."

"You mean that he will complete your toilet?"

"No. He'll get my last ten cents."—Washington Star.

The Indiana State Sentinel

(Established 1822.)

It supported the Democratic candidates and platform in 1897, as it has done for three quarters of a century, and as it will do again in 1898 and 1900.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL has been fighting the battles of the people during its entire existence. It has advocated bimetalism ever since the issue was raised. It is going to continue this fight the best it knows how until the victory is won.

THE INDIANA STATE SENTINEL is opposed to trusts and monopolies of every description. It favors an income tax and all other taxes which will compel rich men and corporations to pay their full share—no more and no less—towards carrying on our National, State and Local governments. It is opposed to protective tariffs, subsidies, bounties, jobs and steals of all kinds. It believes in talking right out for the people every time. It always strikes from the shoulder. It is not owned by the money power, not controlled by it, not in sympathy with it.

Heredity.

It has been said that the training of a boy should begin with his grandmother. Where this precaution has been neglected, there should be some charity for the boy if he does not turn out well, and the generous parent will not refuse to bear at least a portion of the responsibility. "Your son Robert, Mr. Waxworth," remarked a teacher to the father of one of his pupils, "is not lacking in capacity to learn, and has many good points, but he is apt to think that what he does is always right. He is very self-conceited." "I know it," replied the father, with a deep sigh. "He gets that characteristic from his mother's folks. In other respects he takes after us of the family."

—Mr. Ed. Sir, it is not very often I find fault with the work of an Editor. Neither do I think that it is best to do so, for fear that he might meet me at the back door and give me a good thumping when I am full of prune juice. But just this one time and I will do so no more. I have reference to the article on the Rule of Three. You say if the second hand of a clock costs $1.50, the minute hand would cost 60 times as much or $90. Right here I must differ from you. If the second hand is worth $1.50 the minute hand is worth only 1-60 of $1.50 or 2½ cents. Because the second hand makes 60 revolutions while the minute hand makes but one. And the same reason for the hour hand. The second hand makes 720 revolutions while the hour hand makes but one. Therefore it is worth only 1-720 as much as the second hand 1-720 of $1.50 or 5-24 cents. The three hands being worth $1.52 and 17-54 cts. I will not diverge from the remainder of the article. H. A. WINSLOW.

—The tall Masonic temple building in Chicago is slowly sinking. A fortune was spent to secure a firm foundation for this great twenty-one story structure, but it seems to have been a failure. The building has commenced to settle, and already at its roof it is sixteen inches out of line. Excavations for the foundation were made fully thirty feet down, and then piles were driven into the ground and piles driven upon them. Then came innumerable layers of cement and concrete, interspersed with miles of railroad rails laid over the concrete. It was thought that this would make it firm enough. It is surmised some of the piles are sinking into the swampy ground.

A GREAT DEAL

—Walter Penfield came home last week for Thanksgiving with his mother and sister. He is looking as if college life at Ann Arbor was agreeable to him.

—Mr. S. A. Miser was a welcome caller Saturday and contributed $1.50 to the COURIER. Our friends are all pleased to find us on the first floor, and never fail to mention the fact.

—Cal Husselman left yesterday for an extended lecturing tour through the west and southern part of the state. He goes first to New Albany and then to Evansville and other points.

—Two chorus girls quarreled during a performance in New York the other night and a special dispatch says that one of them "was stabbed twice between the second and third acts." It evidently is a very serious case.

—The Northern Pacific Railway Co. have issued a very attractive folder, entitled the "Key to the Klondike" showing map and handsome illustrations and chuck full of information for gold seekers. It will be sent to any address upon receipt of a 2 cent stamp. We acknowledge receipt of a copy at this office.

—Two new members were elected by the L. L. C. Saturday afternoon at the meeting at Mrs. W. C. Hartman's. They are Mrs. Guild and Mrs. Lackey. There were two vacancies, and this again filled the list up to the full number. At the close of the regular meeting the hostess served a nice lunch and the members had an hour or so of social chat.

—Miss Catherine Bishop, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mell Bishop of St. Joe was buried Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Ves Zimmerman and Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Bishop were in attendance at the funeral from this place. Miss Bishop had long been a sufferer and for a time was at the sanitarium at Battle Creek.

—The Little Rock News, commenting on an item about a New York girl kneading bread with her gloves on, says: "We need bread with our pants on; we need bread with our boots on, and if our subscribers in arrears don't pay up pretty soon we shall need bread without anything on."

—Mr. and Mrs. Willis Jenner entertained at their home Saturday night in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Judson Overholt of Goshen. The following persons were present, Mr. and Mrs. Will Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Beaty, Mr. and Mrs. S. S. Potter.

—Phillip Fluke called on us to-day in our new home. His many friends will be pleased to hear that he is able to be about, almost as well as ever, though he has not as good use of his limbs as before his long siege of rheumatism of last winter. Still his appetite is good, and he feels well and looks well for a man in his 82d year.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Marshal Berhalter, of Kendallville arrested Thos Reed of that city at Ft. Wayne yesterday for stealing hides.

—"From Barroom to Pulpit" Sam Small the famous southern orator next Monday evening at Presbyterian church.

—A crowd of about forty "Red men" are coming over from Garrett this evening to institute a lodge of that order in this place. They are very strong in Garrett.

—The advertisement of Schaab & Bro. in the COURIER this week should be read by all They ask you when making purchases to mention the paper in which you saw their ad. The COURIER, also asks their readers to do this as it will show to the firm what paper is the most valuable as an advertising medium.

—Roy Garrett sold out his lunch room, the "Club House" on West Seventh street several days ago, but we omitted a mention of it. Lester Till is the new proprietor, but he is not a new man at the business by any means as he clerked at Cory Shugers' for some time. No doubt he will make the business a success. As far as we can see the business has been good there, right along.

—Oliver Pipes, of Garrett, was a caller Monday and made a generous contribution on his subcription to the COURIER. He is a brakeman on the B. & O. and is nearing promotion to conductor, providing he can pass a satisfactory examination. In 1889 Mr. Pipes and the reporter were both employes of the A. B. Nickey Co. and in August that year visited Niagara Falls together. We are glad to know that Mr. Pipes is succeding so admirably on the B. & O. His income last month was over $96.

—The missionary society of the Lutheran church will meet with Mrs. Irvin Lockwood, on west Fifth st, in the house formerly occupied by Mr. A. Cool, on Friday of this week at 2:30 p. m. a full attendance is desired, let each member bring a friend with them.

—Sam Small is coming.

—A fine wheel to be given to the most popular lady is on exhibition at Harry Trentman's. It is to be given to either Grace Cribbs, of Garrett, or Lydia Hallam at Auburn. The votes are to be counted after the supper at the masquerade ball at Garrett Dec. 9.

Wednesday's Daily.

—Go to F. J. Yesbera's jewelry store for your christmas presents this year, he has a nice new line to select from.

—J. W. Jackman was here yesterday and called to visit a short time. He was getting ready to go to Corunna to attend the Farmers' Institute in which he takes great interest and usually assists.

—A good black walnut cylinder secretary and book case at a very low price. Cost sixty dollars when new and is as good as ever and must be sold. Call on Brown, Culbertson & Roland.

—Will Sponhouer now at Grand Rapids is coming home next week. His aunts Mrs. Frank Daniels and Mrs. Spade will come with him.

—Fire
Fire Fire
Fire Insurance
Leading Agency
WALTER C. HARTMAN.

—Co. Supt. Coe is visiting schools in Richland this week.

—Two Garrett females of the lowest type indulged in a scrap at the Wabash depot last night. Such women should be tarred and feathered.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan took dinner at the Bradford, Sunday. They are so handy to town that they often attend theaters and other entertainments.

—A fine line of China just received at F. J. Yesbera's popular jewelry store. Everything new and elegant. Drop in and see it.

Mrs. Levi Jackson and her son Delbert of St. John called at the new COURIER office Tuesday while in town.

—Good business room on Seventh street to rent. Dwelling on 2d floor. Apply to T. H. Sprott, Auburn, Ind., or John H. Leasure, Logansport, Ind.

—See F. J. Yesbera's new ad in this issue. He is making a special offer to his customers.

—"Soldier's Sweatheart" at the opera house to-night. A good drama.

—Don't forget the Matinee Saturday afternoon for the benefit of the needy children. "Now is the time to remember the poor."

—Mrs. Sherman Dickinson was in town town today. She brings word of Mr. Dickinson's continued poor health.

—The Keeran Sisters now have a Western telephone and their number is 103. The Bell phone which was in their residence has been taken out.

—Teachers should make a note of the change in the date of this month's examination, announced to-day by Supt. Coe.

—Mrs. I. M. Johnson had a stroke of paralysis this morning which is likely to be a serious matter. At present she is quite helpless. Her daughter Mrs. J. L. Morrison, of Chicago has been sent for and is expected here this evening. Dr. Baxter is in attendance.

—F. L. Welsheimer went up to Angola yesterday to arrange matters connected with the Perry Fair trial. It is set for next week.

This forenoon the delivery team of Garrett's grocery took a wild whirl around one block. They scared at a loose tug when being hitched, started off with the tongue loose, knocked over the driver and scooted around the block, but were stopped, and but little harm done.

THE TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

W. H. McIntosh and the editor of the COURIER attended the meeting of the Teachers' Association at Waterloo Saturday afternoon, and were both surprised to find over 100 teachers present, besides many visitors. H. G. Provines, the president was in charge, having came down from Angola, where he is in college. Supt. Coe, was also present. There was a great deal of work done, and a live interest manifested. Altogether the meeting was a success.

AT THE OPERA HOUSE

The 'Irish Detective" last night was good and full of bright hits and a fund of humor that kept the crowd in a roar of laughter. There were excellent specialties, also particularly the songs, that by Mrs. Brown being very fine. The parts taken by the several members of the company had been greatly changed from those of the previous evening, but they were all well done. Tonight is a lovely society play, "The Soldier's Sweetheart" in which Mr. Newell again takes his Irish character and the others have appropriate parts. It will be enjoyable. We hope to see a good house in attendance.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

Friday and Saturday Dec. 3 and 4 at the M. E. church in Waterloo will be the 3d regular Sunday school institute for Grant township. A good program is prepared and plenty of workers will be present. It is hoped there will be a good attendance.

ISAAC SPEER, Pres.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen, Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

EVERY PACKAGE

has the Z Stamp in red on the wrapper. J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Philadelphia.

Social Saturday Evening.

The ladies of the Lutheran church will give a supper in the lecture room of the church on Saturday evening of this week Dec. 4th. Supper served from 5 to 7:30. Mite 15 cents. A good supper will be served, let everyone come and enjoy it.

CALL FOR COUNTY ORDERS.

All county orders issued prior to Sept. 11, 1896, order No. 290 series "P" will be paid if presented to the county treasurer. Interest will stop Dec. 2, 1897.

S. H. HINE,
Treasurer DeKalb Co. Ind.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

In view of the fact that the regular date for the teachers' examination falls on Christmas, the examination this month will be held on Saturday, Dec. 18.

Respectfully,
H. E. COE, Co. Supt.

MRS. B. H. T. WILSON.

Our people will remember Mrs. Wilson, mother of Mrs. D. P. Hale, who resided with the family of the latter when they lived here, their home being the brick residence now owned and occupied by Mrs. Sallie Weamer. D. Maranville, who we believe has for some years occupied the farm, formerly the home of Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Hale, this side of Newville, was in town yesterday and brought word that Mrs. Wilson died Sunday, Nov. 22 of heart failure, at the home of Mr. and Mrs, D. P. Hale, at San Diego, Calif. When they moved from here, they went to Sioux City, Iowa, and a few years later to San Diego.

CORUNNA.

The Farmers' Institute was largely attended. We would like to have it held here again.

Mamie McKee of Goshen spent Sunday here with her parents.

K. A. Johnson made a very instructive speech at the Farmers' Institute on "Care and Raising of Sheep."

Mr, and Mrs. Strouse, spent Sunday in Garrett.

R. M. Lockhart of Waterloo was the guest of O. P. Raber during the institute.

Clark and John Griffith and their wives took dinner with Mrs. David Lutman, Sunday.

Maurice Widney and wife attended the Farmers' Institute here this week. He sang some very nice solos.

Mrs. R. A. Battershell spent thanksgiving with her sister in Angola.

WAS 65 SATURDAY.

Henry Wolf was 65 years old Saturday and his children decided to give him a surprise on Sunday to remind him of the event. So they gathered there with plenty of chicken and other good things. When dinner was ready they sat down to the table and when Mr. Wolf turned up his plate he found a sum of money sufficient to purchase him a fine black suit of clothes. He was so overcome with joy that he could not enjoy the meal and for a time was almost speechless. Mr. Wolf is quite feeble and his hair as white as the driven snow. One would think that he had passed more than 65 winters. But serving a time in the Andersonville prison during the war broke him down for life. We hope he may live to enjoy many more birthday anniversaries.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

THE SILVER REPUBLICANS.

The failure of the Wolcott commission and its dismissal by Lord Salisbury have aroused the silver Republicans, and we have two loud and emphatic bugle blasts from their leaders calling them to action. The result of the Nebraska State election, too, in which the votes of these factionists were added to those of the Democrats and Populists, and turned the scale against the administration forces, comes to testify to their determination and resolution. So soon as the report of the Wolcott commissioners shall have been made public, the schism in the Republican ranks will become active, and President McKinley, distracted as he will be by the reproaches of party associates, by the demands of the Gage National Bank party, and by the progress of the bimetallic cause in every section of the Union, is probably destined to pass through as stormy a period as any President has hitherto seen.

Senator Chandler of New Hampshire, who is the only New England Republican who advocates bimetallism, has printed a letter urging the silver men to action. He predicts ruin and disaster to his party, if they acquiesce in the single gold standard policy, and frankly tells them they will be defeated in the Congress to be chosen next fall, and overwhelmed in the next presidential struggle, unless they return to the bimetallic platform, and to the previous utterances of McKinley favoring silver coinage.

To Senator Chandler's warning comes an echo from Minnesota, in the shape of an address issued by Hon. Charles A. Towne, chairman of the silver Republican party. He declares that the conspiracy to commit the Republican party to the gold policy has for its object the issuing and control of all the paper money of the country by a huge banking system, and that, in face of such a danger, citizenship must rise above partisanship. He appeals to his fellow partisans to use their most energetic efforts to avert such a monstrous evil, and denounces the gold standard, "with all its associated wrongs and abuses," as a degradation of the nation and an enslavement of its producing population.

It is in the very face of such denunciations that Secretary Gage's gold program is to be launched into Congress.—New York News.

"Monetary Reform."

Perhaps one of the results of the great Democratic victory recently achieved at the polls will be a modification of the monetary "reform" proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

A plan that contemplates placing the United States on a strictly monometallic gold basis is not likely to meet with popular approval, and this fact must have been impressed upon the Secretary's mind by the tremendous tidal wave in favor of silver which has just swept over the country. President McKinley is a shrewd politician, and he will at once perceive that such a financial proposition will kill all chances for his re-election; but President McKinley lacks the courage of his convictions and may yield to the pressure brought to bear by the money power, which placed him in the chair he now occupies.

The proposition of the Secretary involves the debasement of silver to mere token money, making it legal tender for only five dollars; the refunding of the bonded debt of this country in bonds payable exclusively in gold; the funding of $200,000,000 of greenbacks in 2½ per cent. gold bonds, the remainder of the outstanding greenbacks, amounting to $145,000,000, to be held in the Treasury and the issuing of all the paper money of the country to be intrusted to the national banks.

The scheme is comprehensive, uncompromising and strictly in the interests of gold. It shows exactly what the money power desires to be accomplished, and places the Republican party squarely on record. It is to be hoped that the Secretary of the Treasury will insist on the adoption of his plan. Too long have the voters been deluded by false pretenses on the part of Republicans. Let the issue be fairly and squarely made. The temper of the people has been shown by the recent elections. No such measure will be accepted.—Chicago Dispatch.

Victory in 1900.

The vote of "confidence" given to the Republican administration at the last election would have made Bryan President had it been cast in 1896. As the matter stands, this country is Democratic, and the party of the people has no need to bring any more States to its assistance. This is not a matter of conjecture; it is a simple fact, easily demonstrated by a simple mathematical calculation.

New York has 36 votes in the electoral college. Kentucky has 13 and New Jersey has 10. President McKinley received the votes of New York, New Jersey and Kentucky, with the exception of one vote in the latter State, which was cast for Bryan. McKinley's total vote in the electoral college was 271, while that of Bryan was 176. At the recent election New York, Kentucky and New Jersey went Democratic.

Suppose the people of these three States had known the real character of the Republican party last year as they know it now, what would have been the result? Simply this: The 58 votes which went for McKinley would have gone for Bryan. These 58 votes taken from McKinley's total of 271 would have left him 213. These same 58 votes added to Bryan's 176 would have given him 234. Thus Bryan would have been elected President by a majority of 21 votes.

President McKinley has expressed himself as satisfied with the results of the recent election. He is certainly a good Democrat. With the solid South, the solid West and with New York and New Jersey, this country is now absolutely Democratic. But the Democracy will not rest upon its laurels. Ohio must be swung into the Democratic column, and other doubtful States redeemed. Who says there will not be a Democrat elected President of the United States in 1900?

Still a Deficit.

Republicans in Congress are going to have a merry time discussing the Dingley tariff deficit. The returns from the Treasury Department for the first two weeks of November show that as a producer of a balance on the wrong side of the ledger Dingley's bill is still quite up to its October record. August and September were no better, and the deficit to date, since the 1st of August, amounts to the snug little sum of $32,546,078.

During the last two weeks the revenue has fallen short $5,235,732, and there is no reason to believe that the next fortnight will show any improvement. When Congress meets, the sponsors of the Republican tariff measure will have to face a deficit of nearly $50,000,000. Perhaps some of the trust-protecting statesmen may regret that they scorned the advice of Secretary Gage to put a tax on raw sugar which would have secured $20,000,000 of revenue without working a hardship to the sugar combine. In any event, they will have to set their wits to work in an effort to devise a revenue bill that will produce revenue.

With the government getting deeper and deeper into debt, the appropriation grabbers will meet with serious difficulties in looting the treasury, although the pension patriots, the army inflationists and the navy expanders will not be daunted nor will they refrain from making exorbitant demands. Economy in governmental expenses is a good thing, therefore Republican legislators may be counted on to disregard it.

Campaign Assessments.

It is gratifying to the unprejudiced observer to note the fact that the Republican press is growing exceedingly moral. The New York Evening Post is an example worthy of emulation. In a recent editorial on the crimes committed by corporations in contributing money to aid Platt in his campaign, this esteemed mugwump rises to an enviably high moral plane. In set terms and with rigid virtue the Post arraigns the corporations, and, among many other severe things, says that "a payment of corporate funds as a political assessment involves the commission of a crime or of a series of criminal offenses."

This is good Democratic doctrine, but is not according to the gospel of St. Mark Hanna. Where would McKinley be to-day if he had acted along the lines of the Post's suggestions? Where would Mark Hanna be if, in the recent election in Ohio, he had kept his checkbook closed and had thrown away his campaign subscription book? It is much easier to answer these questions than it is to convince one's self of the sincerity of the Post. It makes all the difference in the world, to a partisan, which party profits by the aid of corporations. When Hanna was assessing the banks, trusts, corporations, importers and manufacturers of this country to an aggregate amount of $16,000,000 for the express purpose of buying the presidency of the United States for his friend McKinley, did the Post send out a cry of protest? But Platt—well, that's another story.

Trade Repelled by High Tariff.

Why do we cut so insignificant a figure in the trade of the Latin-American States? Chiefly because we have been repelling trade instead of inviting it and expecting these people to adapt themselves to our goods, fashions and customs instead of studying their wants and customs and making goods to supply their needs. German and English manufacturers have adapted their goods to Spanish American wants and have secured their custom. We have failed to do this and have lost it. That in a nutshell is the explanation of why less than $100,000,000 of Latin-American annual purchases are made in the United States and more than $500,000,000 are made in Europe.—Philadelphia Times.

Proving that Tariff Is a Tax.

The Leather Belting Manufacturers' Association recently raised the price of their product to consumers 25 per cent. This is a direct consequence of the Republican tariff tax on hides, and is so announced. It is not often that we find such frankness as this on the part of manufacturers whose business is affected by the "protective" tariff, and it is quite refreshing. The leather belting manufacturers do not beat about the bush or search for other pretexts. They come out squarely and say that in consequence of the Republican tariff tax on hides they will have to charge 25 per cent. more for leather belting.—Boston Post.

Public Funds Paid for Fads.

The original idea of the congressional library having been entirely lost sight of the librarian has recently added to its alleged usefulness by providing a room for blind readers and a lot of books printed in raised type, and now ladies are giving readings from Howells in the room and it is said a piano is to be added presently and other things to make it a pleasant loafing place. This is all very nice, but what has it to do with the library of Congress, and why should the country pay the bills? No wonder this is a billion-dollar country.—Providence Telegram.

Too Much Abuse of Populists.

The fact is there has been something too much of persistent nagging, snarling, sneering and generally abusing Populists as individuals. Those who really know something about them, "by and large," know that in multitudes of instances they are sober, industrious, reading, church-going, peace-loving citizens; that they maintain, often by heroic self-imposed privations, free public schools of more than average excellence; that they are good neighbors, lovers of law and order, who, even in hard times, when money is scarce and grasshoppers, chinch bugs and drouth plentiful, pay their debts at 100 cents on the dollar.—Boston Advertiser.

McKinley's Surrender to Hanna.

The menace of Hannaism in politics lies not so much in the fact that it represents bossism and slush funds in politics, but that menace lies in the abject surrender of a President of the United States to a dominant mind whose crafty introduction of "business methods in politics" made possible the purchase of a Presidential nomination, and in the injection into our political methods of what may be called the capitalized syndicate machine system of securing support and overcoming opposition.—Minneapolis Times.

Qualified Franchise in the South

The enfranchisement of the masses of untutored blacks in the South was one of the greatest political crimes ever perpetrated on civilized communities. Its effect would have been stifling in those communities where the negroes have large majorities if it had been tamely submitted to on the part of the whites. The means used to prevent this ill effect has been in itself necessarily deleterious and demoralizing and the time has come when a remedy must be found.—Nashville American.

Muzzles Badly Needed.

Ex-Minister Hannis Taylor's loquacity has produced the effect that might have been expected. Every sensation monger in the country has felt in duty bound to contribute his mite of misinformation to the discussion of "the Cuban problem." The fact that the majority of these outpourings are childish to the point of inanity and betray the gross ignorance of their inventors will not prevent them from doing incalculable mischief.—Philadelphia Record.

Governor Tanner's Latest Mistake.

It only needed that order disbanding four companies of the Seventh Regiment of the Illinois National guard in Chicago to further prove to the people of the State the character of the officials elected and appointed at Springfield. Governor Tanner has gained no friends among the people whose friendship is worthy of seeking, and he must be secretly despised by the very creatures at whose behest he took such summary and extraordinary action.—Peoria Journal.

Heresy in a Cabinet Report.

The President will have to check the free and sincere pen of his Secretary of Agriculture and bring him into line with the policy of mediaevalism that characterizes the rest of the administration. His talk about extending the country's foreign trade sounds discordant and is a deadly insult to Nelson Dingley, Jr.—New York Times.

Governor Hastings a Heretic.

Well! Well! Here is Gov. Hastings, a Pennsylvania protectionist, telling the national grange that the farmers "have an inherent right to sell in the best market and to purchase in the cheapest market." Then why should the law deprive them of this inherent right?—Boston Transcript.

McKinley's Ambiguous Remark.

Mr. McKinley has not yet told us what he meant by saying that he is highly gratified with the result in Ohio. Such a remark is calculated to make Mr. Hanna feel uncomfortable.—Atlanta Constitution.

Where All Democrats Can Unite.

The whole law-bolstered trust system is pernicious and diabolical, and however widely Democrats may differ on the money question, they should swipe this evil at the first opportunity.—Dallas News.

Collar Buttons for Insomnia.

A Topeka man was recently troubled with insomnia. He thought that some young medical student would be glad to take his case for the practice there was in it and a small fee, if any. He sought out a medical student who seemed to have the proper appearance and laid his case before him.

"I think this prescription will be just what you need," said the coming practitioner. "Three at a dose."

"Pills?" queried the invalid.

"Yes, but just the kind you need."

"How often shall I take them?"

"When you feel as if you needed them."

The patient took the prescription to a near-by drug store and had it filled. The pills were placed in a small box and wrapped up. The man took them home and absent-mindedly tossed them on top of the bureau. He went to bed that night forgetting all about his ailments and the pills. He was unable to sleep and thought that perhaps the pills would bring Morpheus to his rescue. He got up in the dark, groped around for the box, found it, unwrapped it, and was surprised to find but three pills. He took them and returned to bed and was asleep in a few minutes.

He met the young student on the street the next day and told him of the wonderful effect that his remedy had produced. The young hopeful was quite elated over his success. The man returned home that night. During the evening's conversation his wife asked him if he had seen anything of a box of collar buttons that she had purchased the day before. "I put them on top of the bureau," she said, "but the box has been opened and they are gone."—Topeka State-Journal.

The coming of the storks is always an event of considerable interest in Germany, and many are the speculations as to where the birds have spent the cold winter months, and whether the pair who are now occupying a nest on the top of one of the chimneys are the same who brought up a family there last year and who then were such objects of interest and amusement. Thoughts like these occupied the mind of the owner of Schloss Ruhleben, near Berlin, and in order to ascertain if it were the same pair or storks which nested in his park every summer he had a steel ring made on which was engraved the name of the place and the date 1890 and had it fastened around one of Father Stork's legs. Next year the bird returned as usual to his summer quarters, but this time with a new decoration in the shape of a silver ring on the other leg bearing the words: "India sends Germany her greetings."

THE PEOPLE'S MONEY

Independent Action.

"Who would be free, Themselves must strike the blow."

A great issue is before the American people and every effort is being made to obscure and counteract it. Personal appeals and personal ambitions, individual antagonisms and local prejudices, avarice, greed, bigotry and proscription, and every other sentiment repugnant to the spirit of true democracy is invoked to deaden real patriotism and to sacrifice every man who, in the trying hour, has dared to stand true to the rights of the American people.

An amazing spectacle is presented by what is being done in public affairs. Two years ago the President sent in to Congress a message which rang like a bugle call, summoning the representatives of the American people to resist the aggressions of the British flag, and a few days later was presented in the House of Representatives a bill for the perpetuation of a British standard that has destroyed more values and brought more destitution and misery than all the ravages of war.

And yet we were asked to fight the one and to glorify the other, and to surrender to national banks one of the highest functions of national government! Now we have passed a bill to bring about high prices in all protected industries, and to perpetuate low prices in all industries not protected.

The American people are tired of being made the puppets of the miserable policies that are being pursued, and the time is coming when they will say so in terms and tones that cannot be mistaken. Politicians are inventing makeshifts, but the people will marshal their mighty columns upon the line of living issues, and the conflict that will be fought to a finish is the battle of the standards. That is the mighty question that sooner or later will tower above all others, and I feel that I owe to my country and to my party to keep before the people—

1. That the great issue now before the American people is the battle of the standards and not simply a question of circulation.

The question is, Shall we continue under the single gold standard, fraudulently foisted upon us by the Sherman act of 1873, or shall we return to the bimetallic standard given us by the fathers of the republic in 1792?—Bimetallist.

"Silver Inflation."

All the talk about "silver inflation" is absurd. Silver is a precious metal. Just as precious in due proportion as is gold. Its value as bullion has been hammered down by hostile legislation, but its value as money, when given its rights and an equal footing with gold at the mints, is indisputable. It has retained its value as compared with commodities in a marvelous manner. The reason why silver as a metal has cheapened in market value rests in the fact that the demand for its use as money has been restricted by law. Restore free coinage and the value of silver will be restored.

In discussing the existing relations of gold and silver the National Review says: "The audacious and unexampled attack made upon silver, beginning twenty-five years ago, the endeavor to revolutionize the world's measures of value in favor of creditors and against producers by excluding that metal from its old place as the equal colleague of gold, has created a divergence between the two metals unexampled in modern history, from which divergence endless confusion and suffering and injustice has arisen. By halving the supply of money it has been sought to double its value, so halving the value of property and produce, and doubling the weight of debts."

The truth of this statement cannot be denied, and the result of this disastrous experiment has been to create a sentiment on the part of France and a large and influential representation in England to return to the monetary policy of twenty-five years ago. For a large part of the present century the open mints of France and the United States kept gold and silver at a parity, with a ratio of 16 to 1. There is no reason to believe that this could not be done again. The welfare of the world requires the re-establishment of the former par of exchange.

Ratio Between the Metals.

It is an undisputed fact that the weight of the silver known to be in the possession of man is almost exactly 15½ times that of gold.

Humorous writers of editorials favoring gold monometallism frequently refer to the "heaven born ratio" of 16 to 1. Cheap wit cannot affect a scientific fact. It goes without saying that the ratio between gold and silver is not a bit of mere guess work, but, on the contrary, rests upon the basis of absolute truth.

The question of quantity is the thing to be considered in discussing the relations between silver and gold, and upon this relation must be based all discussions as to the future of the metals. Just as long as gold and silver were treated with equal consideration by the mints, the metals retained a parity of value at the ratio of 16 to 1. No great change in the relative quantities of gold and silver has taken place since the demonetization of the latter, and hence it must inevitably follow that equal treatment in the future would restore their parity.

It has been demonstrated that depriving one metal of its full monetary use and doubling the service required of the remaining metal increases the value of the favored money material. Gold has been thus favored, silver thus disinherited.

If gold had been demonetized instead of silver, the latter would now be appreciating in value and the former depreciated. Equal treatment of both metals is demanded by the friends of the people, and the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 would be equal treatment and restore the parity.

To be popular with old people, talk cheerfully, and speak up loud.

TEACHING THE BLIND

HOW INSTRUCTION IS IMPARTED TO THE SIGHTLESS.

The Ecole Braile in Paris and Its Unfortunate Pupils—How Geography and Natural History Are Learned—The Blind in the United States.

Learn Chiefly by Observation.

Most visitors to Paris and other large French towns have been in turn moved and disgusted by the unsightly mass of beggars who crowd round the porch of each French church and public building. More particularly is the French love of children shamefully exploited, and the birth of a blind child into a poverty-stricken family is often hailed with rejoicing, for the unfortunate will very soon become a very profitable source of income to all those connected with him.

A well-known philanthropist, M. Pephau, made up his mind to provide a remedy for this deplorable state of things. After many fruitless efforts, he interested the government in his scheme, and on Jan. 1, 1883, was formally opened the Ecole (school) Braile, which, though originally founded in Paris, has now been transferred to the pretty country town of Saint Mande. Once, however, that a blind child has the good fortune to find himself an inmate of the Ecole Braile, his lot may be envied by his more fortunate brother or sister, for each blind scholar is not only carefully taught all that the ordinary French child learns in the primary government schools, but also shares in the advantages of a splendid gymnasium and delightful playground.

IN THE CHAIR-CANING ROOM.

Most people have heard of the Braile system of teaching the blind, but probably few realize exactly in what it consists. The sense of touch or feeling is very highly developed among those who are without sight, and it is extraordinary to what an extent this sense can be cultivated and increased. The Braile system simply consists of developing and applying the sense of touch till through it the pupil can be taught everything, from the alphabet to basket-making. In other words, although it may seem paradoxical to say so, everything is done to develop among the blind the sense of observation. Indeed, in some ways the inmates of the institution would seem to be even more intelligent and quick than are ordinary children, and, as a rule, they reply to the questions put to them by their masters and mistresses quickly and accurately.

In the Ecole Braile the blind are afforded opportunities not only to acquire an education but also a trade or occupation, and attention is devoted to their physical culture and training in athletics. In short, so far as their condition permits, all the advantages granted to those in full possession of their faculties are accorded also to the blind.

The school is named in honor of the famous teacher who invented what many regard as being the most practical alphabet for the blind. Besides his invention of the alphabet Braile was a practical writer on subjects of interest to the blind and their teachers, and many of his suggestions were so full of common sense that they have been since adopted in most of the institutions for these unfortunates.

Teaching a blind child to read with its fingers is one of the most interesting performances to be witnessed in the institution. The little one's fingers are taken in hand by the teacher, the points and their position are explained, and one letter after another is taught, solely through the sense of touch.

To teach a blind child geography would seem a hopeless task, for never having seen the hills, the rivers, the plains, it would appear difficult, if not impossible, to communicate to such a mind the idea of these objects. In reality the process is easy. The playground is perfectly level and contains no posts or other objects, against which the children might run, and in their haste hurt themselves. A plain is, therefore, but an extension of the playground for hundreds of kilometers, and the idea is perfectly understood. In their walks the children are taken to a brook, made to climb down its banks to the water and to ascertain for themselves its dimensions. A river is only a brook one or two kilometers in breadth; the children are conducted to the steepest hill to be found in the vicinity, made to climb it, and then given to understand that mountains are many times higher and steeper than this hill, and that other countries of the earth are far larger than that in which they live. When these facts have been gained the children are taken to a large globe on which the continents, the mountains, the plains are in relief. A line of protuberances represents a range of mountains, the courses of the rivers are indicated by depressed lines, cities by round-headed tacks, the boundaries of countries by slips of sheet-iron, set edgewise in the plaster of which the globe is made. The shape of the earth is first explained, then the continents are named, and the pupils trace each with their fingers until perfectly familiar with the outline. Then the different countries are named, their boundaries given, and, as each is explained, the pupil traces its limits with his fingers. Thus, little by little, a knowledge of the whole earth is acquired, and afterward this general information is supplemented by flat maps, also in relief, and on a larger scale, of the different countries.

Natural history is taught by the use of stuffed animals, the institution Braile having a large museum of stuffed animals and birds. With the domestic animals, such as the cat, dog, horse and cow, the children are already, in most cases, familiar; then the points of similarity between these and the other animals are explained, and the children soon learn that a fox is like a dog and that among birds there are general resemblances which constitute them a class by themselves. The specimens of the Ecole Braile are selected with a view to illustrating the peculiarities of the animal creation, and it is said to be in the highest degree entertaining to see the amusement with which the children discover that a pelican has an enormous pouch under his bill; that the mountain sheep has horns so disproportioned to his size.

Music is taught the blind by means of the Braile system of letters. The blind have not, as is commonly supposed, better musical gifts than other people, and far more labor is required for them to become expert musicians than is necessary for one in the possession of his sight. Those who can see, read at a glance a double line of music; the blind must read with their fingers, one note at a time, then commit a passage to memory ere they can retain it. With practice, however, they often become wonderfully expert at both reading and playing, the adaptation of the Braile system to musical notation materially lessening their labor.

Trades for the blind are far more numerous now than they were ere systematic instruction began. The blind make baskets and brushes and bedding, ropes, sacks, matting and chairs, while the girls learn knitting, sewing, crocheting and embroidery, and both sexes frequently attain in these trades a cleverness which makes their work equal to that of men and women who can see. Piano tuning is a favorite trade, and perhaps the best as regards its remuneration, and blind tuners are usually thorough and effective in their work. All trades which the blind can practice are now taught in the institutions for their special instruction, and it is gratifying to know that the list of occupations is increasing.

The number of these unhappy people is much larger than is commonly supposed. In the United States in 1890 there were 50,411 blind persons, an increase of nearly 2,000 over the preceding census. In England and Wales the number is 23,467; in the German Empire there are 37,672; in France there were at the latest returns 32,060.

The instruction of the blind is of comparatively recent date. Formerly they were taken care of simply as unfortunates, no attempt being made to give them instruction. Saint Louis, in 1260, founded a hospital for soldiers, crusaders who, on the burning sands of Syria, lost their eyesight. Other hospitals were founded from time to time, but the first effort at education was by Bernouilli, in 1657, who tried to teach a blind girl to read. Valentine Hauy, in 1784, made the first successful attempt, in a practical way, toward systematic instruction of the blind, and he has been followed by a host of devoted men and women, many of them themselves unfortunate in this respect, who have brought the training of this class up to the highest point.

There are in Great Britain and Ireland sixty-one institutions and asylums, where the blind are either cared for or receive a measure of instruction. Germany has thirty-five institutions, France twenty-three and Italy twenty-

two. The United States has thirty-six schools for the education of the blind, which contain about 2,500 pupils. On the whole, the condition of these people is, in this country, far in advance of what it is in any other. Every blind child in the United States has the right to be educated at public expense, and in our institutions the instruction given is not surpassed in scope or method by that of any foreign country.

It is hard to convince doctors and druggists that health is wealth.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Jewels of Life.—Many spend their labor gathering life's waste and throw away life's jewel.—Rev. Frank Crane, Methodist, Chicago, Ill.

Good and Great.—We can all be good and great if we but try. We may not reach the goal for years, but the goal will be reached at last.—Mrs. Booth-Tucker, Salvationist, Chicago, Ill.

Love for Humanity.—When we have the right love for frail humanity we will live for some good purpose, and our lives will be a great blessing to others.—Rev. G. W. Perryman, Baptist, Cincinnati, O.

Greed of Gold.—Do we not know that our one besetting evil is the worship of gold? For money we sell our health of body and peace of mind, our sons and our daughters.—Rev. T. B. Gregory, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

Liberalism.—Orthodoxy has insisted for 100 years that liberalism was dying in this country. Our brethren should learn wisdom and hold the announcement until the obsequies are fully performed.—Rev. R. A. White, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

Progress and Posterity.—A man ought to educate his family in the belief that his son ought to be a better man and fill a nobler place in society than himself. He ought to believe in progress. Have hope for posterity.—Rev. J. J. Muir, Baptist, Washington, D. C.

Great Names.—We want imperishable names, characters, which will stand the test of time. The world's history glows with names of its heroes, and they stand in a grand procession before our imagination.—Rev. R. G. Seymour, Baptist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Gods.—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me" strikes a death blow to the god of power, and the god of money, and the god of profession, and the god of stomach, and the god of social life, and all the gods on the thrones of a big city.—Rev. C. Myers, Baptist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Living Wire.—Electricity was always floating in the air. Only recently have we found a wire to make it light our homes and help our work. Jesus is the living wire, to bring to us in unbroken currents the cheer and power of God.—Rev. C. L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Sabbath.—As God crowned the six days of creation with the seventh day of holy rest, so let the days of your honest labor become sanctified by the solemn rest and devotion of that day, which is the glorious crown of our week.—Rev. H. W. Schneeberger, Hebrew, Baltimore, Md.

Saloons.—Public opinion has done much to reduce the liquor traffic and make it unpopular, and has placed it under a law. The Anti-saloon League has reduced the number of saloons and drinking places in Washington 260 in four years.—Rev. J. W. Duppy, Methodist, Washington, D. C.

ALL ON A PINHEAD.

Alphabet and Figures Engraved on a Very Small Surface.

The alphabet and the figures one to ten on a pinhead. It hardly seems possible to engrave so many characters upon such a small surface, but that feat of microscopic engraving was accomplished by Mr. Joe Whitehouse of Milldale, Ky., a young designer at Noterman's, on Race street. The thirty-six characters are cut out with peculiar distinctness on the head of an ordinary pin—the exact size of which is shown in the accompanying illustration. Under the magnifying glass the letters and figures appear as shown above, and the work is regarded by competent judges of engraving to be excellent. Mr. Whitehouse has been at Noterman's for many years, having there learned engraving and designing, at both of which he is an expert.

Artificial Teeth.

The use of artificial teeth is of ancient origin. Two curious specimens of artificial teeth from the Etruscan tombs, dating from four or five centuries before the Christian era, may be seen in the museum of Corneto, on the coast of Italy, in the mouths of two young girls. On the jaw of one may still be seen two incisors fixed to their neighbors by small gold rings, while in the other, the rings remain, but the artificial teeth have fallen out. The teeth, carefully cut, had evidently been taken from the mouth of some large animal.

Neither.

Junior—I don't know what to think of Miss Knice. Either she is awfully good-natured or she is half-fool. She is smiling all the time.

Senior—Has she good teeth?

Junior—Perfect.

Senior—It is safe to say she is not a fool; but it does not follow that she is awfully good-natured.—Boston Transcript.

The Important Consideration.

"I don't know what this country is coming to!" exclaimed the pessimist.

Rest and Relief

A piece of machinery run by steam and overworked will become cranky, creaky and out of gear, owing to some expansion of metal from heat and friction. Stop its work, rub and brighten and let it rest. In a short while it will be restored and will run smoothly. The human system is a machine. Too much work and worry are thrown upon it; too much of the heat of daily cares; too much of the steam of daily business. The nerves become cranky; they are restless, sleepless and twitchy, and a neuralgic condition sets in. Pain throws the machine out of gear and it needs rest and treatment to strengthen and restore. St. Jacobs Oil is the one remedy of all, peculiarly adapted to a prompt and sure cure. So many have so freely testified from experience and use to its efficacy in the cure of neuralgia that it passes without saying that it surely cures. It will be a gracious surprise to many after the free use of it to find how easily pain, cares and worry may be lifted, and how smoothly the human machine goes on.

The most curiously decorated graves in the world are the negro graves in South America. Some of these mounds are garnished with the bottles of medicine used by the departed in their final illness, and the duration of the malady is easily guessed by the number of bottles.

THE WORLD'S SECOND CITY.

Some Big Figures and Facts Concerning Greater New York.

The Legislature at Albany has approved of the charter of Greater New York, and nothing is needed now but the signatures of the Governor and the mayors of New York and Brooklyn to create the second city of the universe. Simple, isn't it? The House grants a charter bunching two big cities and several smaller ones, the Senate ratifies it, three signatures are added, and you have a greater town than could be built in the old way only with infinite toil and enterprise. In building monster municipalities it is something of an advantage to have a few ready-made communities to use in the mixing.

Greater New York springs into being with over 3,000,000 population, and an area of about 360 square miles, a length of nearly thirty-five miles, and a street mileage that would stretch across the continent. Its surface street car systems, placed in a single line, would reach to Chicago, and its elevated tracks alone would stretch out 160 miles. One-third of the streets are paved.

Greater New York's assessed valuation of real estate in New York, Kings, Richmond and part of Queens County, is $2,264,142,968, and the value of personal property is $397,076,668. The total equalized value of the realty and personal property is $2,169,795,157. The combined cities and towns will start in with a greater indebtedness of $170,000,000.

While it must give first place to London in population and area, the immense metropolis will stand foremost in dock and harbor facilities, claiming fifty-miles of wharfage. As a railroad center, a city of commerce and manufacturing and of vast warehouse capacity, it will also stand pre-eminent. It will contain 130,000 dwellings, 37,000 business houses, 6,500 acres of parks, 1,800 miles of gas mains, 1,100 churches, 1,125 hotels and 350 public schools.

Miniature Persian Palace.

Queen Victoria has received from the Parsees of Bombay a casket representing, in gold and silver embossed work, an old Persian palace. On the panels are seen in relief Persian figures in ancient national costume, while the antique batons or maces with bulls' heads, the old-fashioned war clubs, form the extreme corners of the casket, which is about twenty inches long. The miniature palace is crowned with three figures symbolic of Parsee worship. They are pure gold. A Parsee king is praying before a fire altar, and in the center is seen an angel. Kneeling elephants form the four feet of the casket, tracing an allusion to the period when, driven from Persia by the worshipers of Islam, the Parsees found a resting place in India.

A Missionary Medicine.

Cleanliness begins within. If a man isn't clean inside, he is far from Godliness. A constipated sinner is a stench in the nostrils of the Deity. A man whose food sours in his stomach, and whose liver is leaden, can't help looking at the world hatefully with jaundiced eye, and conjuring up evil thoughts in his tortured brain. Cleanliness of person begets cleanliness of thought. Cascarets, Candy Cathartic are the missionary medicine which purifies men's bodies and minds. Pure, fragrant, palatable, mild and positive, they clean out the intestinal canal, stimulate the liver and strengthen the bowels. Then a man enjoys again a feeling of charity and brotherly love for his fellows and recommends others to take Cascarets and be as happy as he.

DR. THOMAS AT HIS WORK.

Daily Life and Habits of the Famous Liberal Preacher.

A tall, somewhat gaunt, but lithe, figure; a face betokening kindly seriousness, framed with disheveled gray locks; a careless, easy-fitting suit of clothes, more businesslike than clerical in cut, such are some of the outward characteristics of Rev. Hiram W. Thomas, the famous pastor of the People's Church of Chicago. Seated in his study, or workshop, which is on the upstairs floor of his comfortable home on West Monroe street, Dr. Thomas is perhaps seen at his best for those who wish to know something of the personality of the man who has cleaved his way from orthodoxy to an acknowledged leadership in liberal religion.

The crowds that attend the People's Church, in McVicker's Theater, every Sunday, are literally gathered from the four corners of the city, and, to carry the figure still further without straining it, from the four corners of the earth. It is not surprising that this shifting mass of humanity should be composed of individuals who know little of the personality of the great preacher in the rostrum.

Like all successful men, Dr. Thomas has habits. Few clergymen are so much sought after as he for the fulfillment of the clergyman's office in burials, marriages and christenings. Not alone are these solicitations from the families of his own congregation, but literally from the great mass of unchurched people throughout the city and suburbs. The enormous demands on this busy man's time can be imagined. And yet, like all up-to-date clergymen, he must keep pace with the thought of the world and abreast of all modern literature.

Dr. Thomas, in describing to a newspaper writer his economy of time, said that he aimed to get started on his weekly sermon not later than Thursday morning. He works in his study at home, and has a full reference library to aid him in research. This sermon building occupies the People's Church pastor from Thursday until Saturday evening, and if the interruptions have been frequent it is not unlikely that there may be midnight oil consumed on the evening of Saturday. The sermon must be finished, no matter how late the hour, and when the pastor walks upon the platform on Sunday morning there must be no traces of the midnight vigil, but freshness and vigor.

The careful preparation of the musical service is never neglected and the general spirit of devotion pervading the whole service is one of the most impressive features to strangers who pass the vestibule of the People's Church on Sunday morning. But the sermon is the thing after all, from Dr. Thomas' point of view. He holds that the close thought of a preacher for an hour every Sunday should in ten years be equal to the hearer to a four years' university education.

To be equal to the occasion, however, naturally requires vast reading. Dr. Thomas has others constantly reading for him. He said that two men friends and one woman friend are now reading books for him, the pith of which will be given to him to absorb later on. Speaking of the impossibility of a busy pastor reading for himself all or even a majority of new books, Dr. Thomas says he has frequently reviewed books in public that he never read for himself. With reliable assistance, however, he has never been deceived as to the real thought of a writer, and through this method of reading by proxy the range of all literature is not impossible of attainment. Magazines and newspapers are Dr. Thomas' hobby, and he is an omnivorous skimmer of both.

STUDY OF REV. DR. THOMAS.

In private life, in the study or in the pulpit there is no difference in Dr. Thomas' conception of what real religion means. A favorite saying of his is that if there is any good in religion at all it should take hold of the little things of life as well as enabling men to grapple with the eternal. It is Dr. Thomas' belief that one of the great missions of liberal religion is to the unchurched and laboring classes, as well as to those of the educated classes who have turned on orthodoxy. He deprecates the tendency to neglect church going on Sunday as one of the evils of the age, but takes the ground that after one church service on Sunday morning the rest of the day may be wisely devoted to recreation and social amenities.

Self-Improvement.

Men of business are accustomed to quote the maxim that "Time is money," but it is much more; the proper improvement of it is self-culture, self-improvement, and growth of character. An hour wasted daily on trifles or in indolence, would, if devoted to self-improvement, make an ignorant man wise in a few years, and employed in good works, would make his life fruitful, and death a harvest of worthy deeds. Fifteen minutes a day devoted to self-improvement, will be felt at the end of the year. Good thoughts and carefully gathered experience take up no room, and are carried about with us as companions everywhere, without cost or incumbrance.—Weekly Bouquet.

REMARKABLE CAREER

Of Dr. Thomas W. Evans Who Died Recently in Paris.

Dr. Thomas W. Evans, the famous dentist who died recently in Paris, only a few months ago came to this country to bury his wife, and now he has closely followed her to the great beyond.

Dr. Evans was born in Philadelphia and decided when only 13 years old to become a dentist. When 18 years old he graduated from the Jefferson Medical College and two years later went to London. In 1846 he went to Paris and made a great reputation there, receiving from the courts of Europe more honors and decorations than have ever been conferred on any European of less than royal blood, the single exception being Bismarck.

Napoleon III. was among his earliest patrons, and through him he was introduced to the family of the King of Denmark. Among his other patients there were the King's daughters, afterward the Princess of Wales, the Empress of Russia and the Duchess of Cumberland; also his sons, the future Kings of Greece and Denmark.

No American ever had such a footing at Marlborough house as Dr. Evans. He was on terms of intimacy with the family of the King of Belgium, the German imperial family and at the royal palace in St. Petersburg.

The intimate relations of Dr. Evans with Napoleon III. enabled him, it is said, to prevent the recognition of the southern confederacy, even after he had fully made up his mind to do so and had entered into correspondence with the English prime minister to secure the co-operation of England. Dr. Evans won consent to a delay, came to Washington, saw President Lincoln, and carried back such assurances of the ultimate victory for the Union as to persuade Napoleon to relinquish his intention.

During the Franco-Prussian war Dr. Evans organized and maintained at his own expense an ambulance service that did incalculable good. He personally directed the movements of the Red Cross Society, and it is said was the only man in Europe who might pass from camp to camp. One of the most interesting parts of his career was the share which he took in assisting the French Empress Eugenie to escape from Paris after the disaster of Sedan. He was instrumental in conducting her from the city and putting her on board a vessel that conveyed her to England. Were it not for him Eugenie might and probably would have shared the tragic fate of Marie Antoinette.

Dr. Evans' fortune, which is estimated at $35,000,000, was amassed largely in real estate transactions in Paris. In this country he owns $5,000,000 worth of real estate. Dr. Evans' only relatives are two nephews, Col. Charles F. Muller, of Utica, N. Y., and I. R. Evans, of New York.

TEACHERS AND EDUCATION.

The True Teacher is More Than a Setter of Tasks.

The true teacher is more than a setter of tasks and a hearer of lessons; he is an influence. And his pupils are not, first of all, students, but human beings. Hence, if necessary, a teacher would be willing to sacrifice something from his ideal, in the matter of his own formal preparation, if by doing so he can secure the far greater and more important gifts of bodily and mental health, steady nerves, a sense of balance and proportion and a profound and sympathetic knowledge of his fellow men. No one is so dreadfully in danger of getting into a mental rut, of becoming dogmatic, pedantic and priggish; and the antidote for these things is found in getting absolutely away from his professional environment for as long a time as possible each year, resting his nerves and brain, and, above all, mingling with men and women whose standards and interests are absolutely different from his own. To go from his class room to a place where the same old grind in another form is still going on, to make one of a crowd of jaded, nervous, sensitive beings who are stewing in their own juice, and gabbling over and over the formulas of the Educationist, so far from being a stimulus and an inspiration, is actually the undoing of a teacher, and sends him back to his work with a still further exhaustion of energy and enthusiasm and sympathy. So we say to the educator if he can be a man, go off somewhere, anywhere, to the place where education doesn't count; bivouac in the woods with a party of stockbrokers, or hobnob with down-east fishermen; and to the woman teacher we recommend the society of the most frivolous, giddy and flirtatious young girls who infest the myriad resorts in summer. This will keep the balance properly adjusted, replacing hysteria and dullness and nerves by a renewed invigoration, an augmented sense of humor and a saner and more highly developed insight into human nature.—The Bookman.

The University of Paris.

In the several colleges of the University of Paris there are between 28,000 and 30,000 students, more than three times as many as are found in any other educational institution in the world. There are other universities in France, but that in Paris offers such superior advantages that they are attended only by students preferring to remain near their own homes, or who desire the instruction of some particular professor. More than 10,000 of the students are in the department of medicine, and 8,000 more attend the school of Fine Arts. Of the art students, about 1,500 are Americans.

Beat the Reporter.

President Draper of the Illinois State University is entitled to fame. He has beaten the reporter who proposed to beat him. The president was to deliver the commencement address at the Ohio State University. A reporter borrowed his manuscript, and, to prevent others from getting it, held on to it till the last minute—indeed, a trifle after. The orator, having more addresses than time at his command, delivered another one, and left his reporter friend in the amusing position of having a corner on what he didn't want.—Ex.

Schools Broaden Their Carriculum.

The city and town school superintendents of Indiana at their session in Indianapolis decided that it is a mistake to teach American history to the exclusion of world history in the lower grades. In the course of study agreed upon the history of the world will be taught along with American history.

Suggestions for Government.

Give no unnecessary commands.

Explain to your pupils the necessity of proper deportment and prompt obedience.

Encourage them to be truthful by remitting penalties as far as possible when they make a full and free confession.

Common sense and the ability to judge the guilt or innocence of the pupil is a requisite in successful government.

Regard all pupils as trustworthy until you find them otherwise. Children rarely forgive a teacher who suspects them of wrong when they are innocent.

Do not attempt to compel pupils to inform on one another under threats of punishment. Rather let your own tact govern you in the detection of an offense.

Do your own governing as far as possible; it weakens your authority to call upon the superintendent or the members of the school-board for assistance.

In making or enforcing rules look back to your own childhood; recall your own experiences, your own impulses. Put yourself in the place of the child to be governed, then act.

Allow pupils the largest liberty consistent with their welfare and the welfare of the school, and when restrictions are placed on them explain the necessity for such restriction.

Make only such rules as you are willing to enforce.—Raub's School Management.

Misery by the Wholesale,

Is what chronic inactivity of the liver gives rise to. Bile gets into the blood and imparts a yellow tint, the tongue fouls, and so does the breath, sick headaches, pain beneath the right ribs and shoulder blade are felt, the bowels become constipated and the stomach disordered. The proven remedy for this catalogue of evils is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine long and professionally recommended, and sovereign also for chills and fever, nervousness and rheumatism.

Dangers from Lamps.

The lamp is such a necessary article in the home that it is strange it should be neglected as often as it is. It requires but a few minutes' care each day to keep it in order, yet this short time is denied it by many housekeepers. An ill-kept lamp is a dangerous, as well as unsightly object, and many of the explosions of oil lamps, which appear almost every day in the newspapers, might be traced to carelessness in caring for the lamps. No woman having the welfare of her family at heart will willfully neglect this very important task. The danger of allowing children or even careless grown-up people to handle lamps cannot be overestimated.

Trains to the South Resumed.

Information comes from the passenger department of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company that all their trains have been resumed, and schedules restored. These include a double daily solid train service from Cincinnati, Chicago, Louisville, Evansville and St. Louis to Nashville, Memphis, Birmingham, Montgomery, Mobile, Pensacola and New Orleans. Also a double daily service of Pullman buffet sleeping cars from the Northern cities to Jacksonville, Florida.

Better than All of Them.

Mocha coffee, from Yemen in Arabia, is reputed to be the best; but the principal supplies are now obtained from Ceylon, Java, the West Indies, Brazil and Central America. No matter where it comes from, every berry of it contains caffeine, which is a slow poison. The more coffee you drink the more your nerves are disordered and your digestion injured. Coffee makes you fidgety and wakeful, then you take sedatives to quiet you. A bad business all around. Break it up by using Grain-O instead of coffee. Made from pure grains, it is a true food and body-builder as well as a delightful beverage. Make this change and you will soon cease to realize that you have a nerve in your system. The coming table drink is Grain-O. Packages 15c. or 25c. each—one-fourth the cost of coffee.

A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE.

Heat, sense of tenderness and swelling of a part, are all indications that there is need of instant repair—the stitch in time. Where these symptoms exist on the left or the right side of the womb, disease of the ovary is setting in, and soon there will be, if there is not already established, a discharge, trifling at first, but later copious and irritating. Soon, also, there will be felt dull, dragging pains radiating from the ovary.

Do not, my sister, let your malady go so far, but those of you who are already suffering in this way should begin at once a course of treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It will restore the organs to their normal condition.

In this connection MRS. E. L. MYERS, Quakake, Pa., says: "My ovaries were badly diseased, and for almost a year I suffered with severe burning pains which were almost unendurable, and a dull, heavy pain in the lower portion of my back. If standing I was most relieved with my foot resting on a stool or chair. The doctor told me I would have to take my bed and keep quiet. I had not used half a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before it worked wonders with me. I now owe my health to the Compound. To those who are suffering from diseases peculiar to women, I would say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is just what they need."

Mrs. Pinkham wishes to befriend you, and if you will write her at Lynn, Mass., telling her just how you feel, she will give you the very best advice free of charge. Think what a privilege it is to be able to write to a woman who is learned in all these matters, and willing to advise you without charge.

There is no long waiting for help if Ripans Tabules are taken for dyspepsia and headache. Relief comes quickly. One Tabule (about the size of a small button) will relieve distress in the stomach within fifteen minutes and the headache will shortly disappear. There was an industrious, hard-working woman of Cooperstown, N. Y., some sixty years of age, who for a long time had suffered greatly from dyspepsia and dreadful headaches. Her stomach tormented her so that she could hardly work at all, and, although she had tried all sorts of things, she got no relief. A friend sent her some Ripans Tabules and she felt better as soon as she took the first one. She felt more like working. "I have continued with the Tabules ever since," she says, "and they always help me."

A new style packet containing THE RIPANS TABULES in a paper carton (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York—or a single carton (THE TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

THANKSGIVING SERVICES

Rev. Guild's Address Well Prepared and Forcibly Spoken

A fine audience assembled Thursday morning at the Baptist church to take part in Thanksgiving services. A numerous choir led by Mr. Hastings rendered Coronations and America with other selections in a stirring manner, the ministers of the Lutheran, Presbyterian and Methodist churches, Revs. Brosy, Colvin and Guild occupied the pulpit.

The address by Rev. Guild was well prepared and forcibly spoken. It covered much ground of ancient times. It asserted that modern invention has been anticipated and even excelled ages ago, declared that national life might expire in modern civilization as they have in antiquity from like causes and affirmed that christianity was the potent factor of permanancy

As the wave flows and ebbs, as the pendulum swings to and fro by the effect of gravity, so the speaker said, nations achieved great enlightment only to fall back and give place to some other, to be baffled in turn.

The startling lowness of Roman morals was illustrated by the boast of a Roman matron that she had taken a fifth husband within a year.

The perils menacing the United States were named, such as undesirable immigration and the sin of intemperance.

It was said that in 1900 the census would show 43 million people foreign birth or parentage in this country, and a period of fourteen years was proposed before suffrage should be given.

Acts of doubtful honesty and downright dishonesty, were preferred because "there was money in it," and the saloon was anathematized as the curse of civilization, symbolized by whisky barrel and beer keg.

Rev. Guild appeared to fine advantage in the role of a lecturer and those present were given a rare literary treat.

CONGRESS MEETS.

On The First Monday In December, The Solons Will Convene.

—Congress meets next Monday for the regular session. There is a good deal of work for that body to do, but they are not likely to accomplish much as each member seems to think he knows more as to what should be done than does any other member. Besides Speaker Reed is "the whole thing" any way, and there can be nothing done unless it suits him. It is hard to explain why a body of men, prominent, intelligent and at home influential, will when meeting to make laws for the whole country, allow themselves to be held captive by any one man no matter if he is speaker. And without their votes he could not get the place. And they vote him into office knowing in advance, that the very minute he has majority of the votes of the House in his favor for that affice, that very moment he will assume the part of master, and they will be his abject servants. It is the strangest display of individual weakness and want of self-respect and independence of spirit ever shown by any public body in a country that boasts of intelligence and free government. Yet this man Reed has held the gag over congress for some time longer. One thing should be said in his favor. He is a man of strong personality and great ability. And in those cases in which he is right, the great influence he exerts is for good. But unfortunately for the country he is not always right. And unfortunately for free government, the whole situation is contrary to all our theories and all the practices of a republican form of government. And more unfortunate it is for individual members, for instead of being able to represent their districts in the proper manner, they represent nothing. Their individuality is lost, or can only appear when the speaker permits. Often they cannot even get to vote on a motion unless the measure is one that the speaker wants called up. If he does not want it called up, it does not get called up. The whole situation in the House, is a strange anomaly in American legislative conditions, and one that is neither pleasing nor encouraging. Reed is the House, and the House is Reed's.

AN OLD ENGINEER,

Run an Engine on the New York Central Forty-Three Years Ago—Cured by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

GREENVILLE, MICH.—E. A. Smith, engineer for F. N. Wright & Co., this city, ran a locomotive on the N. Y. C. & H. R. Ry., 43 years ago. He can tell many amusing incidents of the rail in the early days; but prefers to speak of his recent experience with rheumatism, and relief secured from use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. Mr. Smith is well advanced in years and his trouble had been so serious and of long standing that it became constitutional. He doctored and took all the different kinds of medicine suggested for the trouble, without any benefit. Recently he was advised to take Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; a nerve preparation which has been received with much favor in Montcalm County, and which has performed many remarkable cures. The effect of its use was highly satisfactory, not only in relieving his rheumatic pains, but also in correcting symptoms of kidney trouble which existed. It certainly is to be hoped that a knowledge of Mr. Smith's experience may lead other sufferers to use this valuable preparation.

Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has many virtues not possessed by any other form of treatment. It is entirely free from morphine, opium, cocaine, and the stimulating drug, kola, which is so persistently advertised. Such drugs are ruinous and should be avoided as pernicious.

IN BUSNESS 23 YEARS.

At A. Lewis' office this morning they got to discussing as to how many Auburn business men have been in business since 1875, or 23 years. We have looked over the files of the COURIER of that year and have interviewed a number of the older business men and find but a few of the old houses still doing business. Among them are John L. Davis, F. E. Davenport, in the same rooms they occupied then. The Swineford House was then managed by Mr. Swineford, and now by Mrs. Swineford The First National Bank is in the same place, and has at least two of the same stockholders, Wm. McIntyre and Dr. J. H. Ford. Ed. Baker occupies the same room with the same business that he and his brother Chris then carried on under the name of Baker Brothers. Thomas Sommers had a saloon then, and we presume in the same place. Ed. Eldridge had had a saloon, but in 1875 was running a grocery. J. Beuret had his tinshop as now and in the same place. F. N. Wright & Co. were in the lumber business but not in the same place, the old location was on South Jackson, near R. W. Cobb's, we believe. This firm then included A. Lewis still in the same business. C. C. Shaffer, is still in the same business as at that time. Dr. Swarts we believe is the only physician here then. Hartman & Rose were in the law as partners, and in 1870 Joe Rainier was in the butcher business and Wm. Sheffer in the harness business. If we have omitted any, let us hear from you.

Persistent Coughs

A cough which seems to hang on in spite of all the remedies which you have applied certainly needs energetic and sensible treatment. For twenty-five years that standard preparation of cod-liver oil, has proved its effectiveness in curing the trying affections of the throat and lungs, and this is the reason why: the cod-liver oil, partially digested, strengthens and vitalizes the whole system; the hypophosphites act as a tonic to the mind and nerves, and the glycerine soothes and heals the irritation. Can you think of any combination so effective as this?

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper.

50c. and $1.00, all druggists.

THE LYRIC LADIES.

About the sweetest musical treat we ever attended was that given by the Lyric Ladies of Chicago, Saturday evening. It was the first of the series of entertainments to be given by the Juniors in their lecture course and they were truly fortunate in this first one. Whether they cleared any money by it, we are not prepared to say, but hope they did. There was a fairly good audience and all we talked with were pleased. The singing was of a high order, and they had fine and well cultivated voices. The girl with the bass voice was a wonder and captured the house by the depth and sweetness of the tones she was able to create. But all sang well, and nearly every piece received an encore. The lady reader was also good, and what was fully as satisfactory, she gave new pieces. Darius Green was not mentioned, and that omission alone would have made her popular. Altogether the lads and lassiess of the Junior class have every reason to be proud of their first entertainment. And right here we should not forget the little speech of the president Charlie Borst, when he came out to bid the audience the usual "kind good night." He was a little frightened, but he didn't "flunk," but hung onto the willows, said his say, thanked the audience for present favors and bespoke more for the future and gracefully retired amid the hearty plaudits of his hearers. We hope our people will give all their entertainments the fullest measure of favor and patronage.

NOT ALWAYS UNDERSTOOD

A fact often overlooked, or not always understood, is that women suffer as much from distressing kidney and bladder troubles as the men. The womb is situated back of and very close to the bladder, and for that reason any distress, disease or inconvenience manifested in the kidneys, back, bladder or urinary passage is often, by mistake, attributed to female weakness or womb trouble of some sort.

The error is easily made and may be as easily avoided by setting urine aside for twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need doctoring. If you have pain or dull aching in the back. pass water to frequently, or scanty supply, with smarting or burning, these are also convincing proofs of kidney trouble If you have doctored without benefit, try Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy. The mild and extraordinary effect will surprise you. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures. If you take a medicine you should take the best. At druggists fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention AUBURN COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

FUN WITH THE TARIFF.

The Butler Record is having some fun with its ideas of the tariff question. The editor is evidently one of those who believe all we have to do to become prosperous, is to be taxed higher on imports. We had been taxed under the Wilson law, at an average of 35 per cent. Now comes the blessed Dingley law and puts up the tax to an average of about 56 per cent, and at once all good republican editors tell us this change will make times very much better. The editor of the Record understands the question a little better than the average of his class, but he still makes bad breaks. After copying what we had said, though omitting the low priced clover seed, it goes on to say it "never claimed protection raises the price of all farm products, except as it lessened importation." And then adds.

"A tariff on an article of which we produce a sufficient amount to supply our needs so that none is imported, cannot affect the price of the article. But a protection tariff on some other imported article which will raise the price of the article so that it can be manufactured in this country, will give employment to men to manufacture it here and thus increrse their ability to purchase the other article of home production and thus increase the demand and consquently the price of that article. This we see exemplified in the present price of corn. Although we have this year as large a crop as last year yet the price is now 25 cents a bushel where last year it was but 20 cents."

Now this sounds a little funny. As the United States is the only country "that produces a sufficent amount to supply our needs" then according to his own reasoning, "a tariff on this article could not affect the price." Yet he goes right on to say that the price of corn exeplifies his position though he had distinctly said that a tariff could not influence the price of anything we could produce in the country as cheaply as they could elsewhere. There are several points like this in his statement, and they go to prove that the Record is having some harmless fun with the great tariff question.

STILL ON EARTH.

Notices Given Our Busness Men Years Ago.

Under the above head the DAILY COURIER will reprint from day to day advertisements of our business men who were here doing business nearly 22 years ago and who are still in the same business. The fact that they advertised then and have kept it up all these years is evidence that "it pays" and should be an object lesson to people who are trying to do business without advertising. An issue of the Republican of March 2, 1876, then published by R. H. Weamer, now of the Gazette, says of our enterprising towns man, A. Lewis.

"The people of Auburn, are proud of some of its business institutions, but of none more so than of the extensive lumbering interests of F. W. Wright & Co., presided over by A. Lewis Esq. The extensive yards are supplied with every variety of lumber required by this market, and is sold at the most reasonable figures which can be afforded. The study of Mr. Lewis is how he can best serve the peoples interests, and to his accommodations are due much of the improvement and growth of our city. We are glad to mention such business firms, for it is a pleasure for us to accord merited praise. In addition to the lumber, lath and shingles sold, this firm has disposed of over sixty-thousand bushels of lime. This item alone will give the reader a good idea of the building done in the city and vicinity. The same firm has paid out nearly fourteen thousand dollars to the Ft. W., J & S. railroad for freight another item from which one can judge of the business being done by them. We wish F. W. Wright & Co., abundant success, as they are truly deserving."

NOTICE.

As I am permanently located in Auburn and engaged in the sale of fruit, ornamental and shade trees, also vines, plants and high grade roses, I would solicit your patronage for spring plants. I can save you from 50 to 75 per cent as I buy direct from the celebrated Monroe Nursery, Monroe, Mich. I stand ready to correct all mistakes and replace all dead stock at half price.

Respectfully yours,

MONTHLY SUFFERING.

Thousands of women are troubled at monthly intervals with pains in the head, back, breasts, shoulders, sides hips and limbs. But they need not suffer.

These pains are symptoms of dangerous derangements that can be corrected. The menstrual function should operate painlessly.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

makes menstruation painless, and regular. It puts the delicate menstrual organs in condition to do their work properly. And that stops all this pain. Why will any woman suffer month after month when Wine of Cardui will relieve her? It costs $1.00 at the drug store. Why don't you get a bottle to-day?

For advice, in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, "The Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. ROZENA LEWIS, of Genaville, Texas, says: "I was troubled at monthly intervals with terrible pains in my head and back, but have been entirely relieved by Wine of Cardui."

NO PAY—NO CURE

That is the way all druggists sell Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic for Chills and Malaria. It is simply Iron and Quinine in a tasteless form. Children love it. Adults prefer it to bitter, nauseating Tonics. Price 50c. For sale by Robbins & McCord.

WE'LL ALL LAUGH.

At Ves Zimmerman's Recent Experience With An Alarm Clock.

(St. Joe News.)

A good joke has leaked out on Ves Zimmerman of Auburn, who with his wife were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Kagey at this place on Sunday night. It seems that Mr. Kagey has an alarm clock, which is set to go off early every morning in order to get Charley Kagey out in time to set the baking at the bakery. Ves Zimmerman has a telephone connected with his residence at Auburn, and when the alarm went off early Monday morning his first thought was that the telephone bell was ringing. Springing from the bed under the impression that he was home he made a rush for the door and ran "ker plunk" up against the solid wall causing a whole multitude of stars to appear. He felt sure there was a door there somewhere and imaging that he was surely wanted at the telephone, he made another attempt to get out and ran up against the wall again. The result was another crash and more stars. By that time his wife woke up and taking in the situation she explained matters to her bigger half, and got him back into bed again. Morning revealed the fact that Sylvester was quite sore in several places, and that it would take a pretty big court plaster to draw all of the dints out of the wall in the bedroom.

REV. A. B. LYLLY.

SITUATION IN A NUT SHELL.

(New York Worlk.)

New York, New Jersey and Kentucky cast fifty-eight electoral votes for McKinley, one of Kentucky's votes going to Bryan. New York, New Jersey and Kentucky all went democratic last week. Had McKinley been a candidate last week instead of last year the popular votes in these three democratic states would certainly have been cast against him. Now, deduct these fifty-eight electoral votes from the 271 which Mr. McKinley received, and there are left 213. Add these fifty eight votes to the 176 of Mr. Bryan and he would have 234. That is a majority of twenty-one in the electoral college. In other words, the democrats do not need to gain another state. They need only retain these three—New York, New Jersey and Kentucky—and they will elect the next president.

COMMISSIONERS

The Board Meets and Gets Right to Work.

This forenoon the Board met and soon after, Mr. Hague retired and gave place to his successor, E. R. Shoemaker. Work began once, and the lists of orders drawn for the last quarter were carefully gone over. This is quite a job, but is made obligatory on the Board by the recent law, and the law is a wise one. Mr Gunsenhouser, being still confined to the house, as the result of breaking his leg could not be present. He wrote Mr. Bateman that perhaps he would not be able to get here this week, though he may be in possibly the last of the week if his injuries improve rapidly. So far he is getting along all right. When he is able to attend, the Board will be reorganized and Mr. Gunsenhouser will no doubt be made its president according to the usual custom. Mr. Bateman has been president for the past year and expected to superseded today, but is obliged to "hold over" a few days, till Mr. Gunsenhouser can be present. So Mr. Bateman and Mr. Shoemaker are doing the work alone, with Deputy Auditor Boland and County Attorney James H. Rose to assist more or less as needed. A good deal of other business is coming in and pressing on their attention. The term will likely be a busy one.

Wonders Never Cease.

No one need suffer the tortures of rheumatism, because that modern liniment, Salvation Oil, positively cures it. "I was a great sufferer from sciatic rheumatism, and the best of doctors attended me without relief. I commenced using Salvation Oil, and two bottles helped me wonderfully. It certainly has worked wonders with me. Mrs. E. J. Phelps, Box 28, Enfield, Conn." Salvation Oil is for sale by all dealers for 25 cts. Take no substitute. Sold by F. E. Davenport, Auburn.

MR. HAGUE STEPS OUT

After a Faithful Service of Three Years.

Isaac Hague ended his service as Commissioner yesterday, and becomes a private citizen once more. He has been a faithful and painstaking officer and brought to the discharge of his duties a good deal of experience in public business which proved of good service on the board. The office is a hard one to fill satisfactorily to all, but we believe Mr. Hague came as near doing this as any one. The most difficult matter that came up during his term, was the trouble over the county officers and in going into this case he was of great value to the county and the taxpayers. But his good work in this was followed by the unwise and very unjust attack on him and Mr. Bateman which to say the least, was very poor pay for the hard work they had done for the taxpayers. They were properly and triumphantly acquitted and we believe no one will ever again question their honesty. Personally, we believe them both honest men, and their persecution, a gross injustice. And we bid adieu to Commissioner Hague, and welcome him to the ranks of private life as a man who has always stood high in our opinion, and we trust always will.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

RIOTING.

The Czechs Attack the House of Hebrews.

Prague special: At Tabor the Czechs attacked the house of the Hebrews and broke the windows of the synagogue. Fifteen rioters were arrested. The local force of gendarmes was reinforced and the military were called upon to assist in restoring order. A mob of 1,000 persons at Braunau attacked the houses of the Czechs and in spite of the efforts of the gendarmes and regular police smashed windows and did other damage. In Prague a military patrol was fired upon from a house. None of the patrol was wounded.

Rich Man Was a Robber.

A. E. Sibley, a merchant in Rheffiel, Iowa, was shot dead while robbing a neighboring store. The safe in his private apartments has been opened. In the safe were many diamond rings, old bracelets and jewelry of every description, including seventeen gold watches. Dry goods which had been stolen by Sibley were identified by Liscomb merchants. Jonas Schlesinger of Hampton, identified clothing stolen from a car in the railroad yards at Hampton, and for which the railroad company had settled. Mr. Hobble of Hampton, found three bicycles which were stolen from him. Sibley was reputed to be worth $40,000.

To Export Their Tobacco.

Havana special: A delegation from the city of Pinar del Rio, consisting of the Mayor of that place and 200 merchants, planters and agriculturists of all political parties, called upon Senor Jose Canalejas, the Special Commissioner of Spain, and represented to him the necessity for the exportation of leaf tobacco, of which, they added, there were 60,000 bales in the warehouses. The delegation requested the Commissioner to use his influence with Captain General Blanco to bring about such exportation. Senor Canalejas promised that he would make proper representation to the Government on the subject.

Thorn Sentenced.

Martin Thorn, or Torceswiski, convicted in New York of the murder of William Guldensuppe, has been sentenced to be electrocuted in the week beginning January 10, 1898. When Justice Maddox put the customary questions to him he responded promptly, collectedly and without outward evidence of emotion. "My true name," said the murderer, "is Torceswiski. I was born in Germany and am 35 years old. I am a barber, and have never been in prison before. I was brought up in the religious belief of the Roman Catholic Church. I can read and write. My father is living. I am not married."

Foreign Help Not Needed.

Madrid special: The Minister for the Colonies, Senor Mora, has received a dispatch from Marshal Blanco, the Captain General of Cuba, saying: "I have sent the following telegram to our Minister at Washington: 'There is no need for foreign help to provide for the wants of this island or its inhabitants. The Government, from its own resources, is endeavoring to provide for the necessities, the need of which, moreover, is diminishing daily.'"

Tortured and Robbed.

Two masked robbers entered the home of John Hartong, a farmer, 98 years old, living near Akron, Ohio. They tortured and threatened the old man into insensibility, but he refused to give up his money. When he was unconscious they searched the house and found in a belt the farmer wore night and day, $800. Hartong lives alone, and is wealthy. Local talent is suspected, and bloodhounds were put on the track of the robbers.

Zola's Vow.

A dispatch to the New York World from Paris says: "I have substantial proofs of Dreyfus' innocence," Emile Zola asserts. "He shall not remain in exile. I have made his liberation my affair. I will devote my life to it. France is no long r France if she can be so deceived and driven to mad rage against an unfortunate being who for three years has been expiating upon atrocious conditions a crime he never committed."

Street Car Collision.

Two suburban cars, carrying twenty passengers, both running 25 miles an hour, collided on the Detroit and Oakland Electric Railroad at Detroit. Three men were instantly killed and a score injured, ten of them seriously.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne.

The following are the attractions at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Dec. 14.—"Captain of the Nonesuch."
Dec. 15.—"Coat of Many Colors."
Dec. 18.—"Wizard of the Nile."

Slew 60,000 Rats.

Delaware (O.) special: A rat hunt in Troy Township, participated in by two sides of 100 each, closed a day or two ago. Sixty thousand rats were killed. A public call has been issued for a rat hunt of the city against the township, under the auspices of the Aged People's Home, where great loss of property is caused by rats.

New Bank at Crestline.

The First National Bank of Crestline, Ohio, has been authorized to begin business, with a capital of $50,000.

Gave Too Light Weight.

Silk Examiner Brown at New York has discovered an error in the momme weight as given by the Japanese exporters. Instead of 1.75 grammes, the momme weighs 3.75 grammes. This discovery will save at least $250,000 a year to the United States.

One of Fate's Freaks.

George Douglass, the negro who accidentally killed Albert Grayer at Snowden, Pa., a mining hamlet, last spring, in attempting to murder another man with whom he had quarreled over a game of pool, was hanged in the county jail yard at Pittsburg.

TROUBLES OF INDIAN TRIBES.

Reports of Government Agents at the Various Reservations.

From Washington comes the news that some interesting reports have been made by Indian agents in their annual review of developments in their fields. At the Pottawatomie and Great Nemeha reservations in Kansas there are about 16,000 acres of surplus lands in the Prairie Band reserve that are likely to be a subject of contention in the future, and there seems to be a growing sentiment in the tribe favoring their sale. At the Omaha and Winnebago agency in Nebraska the assumption and dissolution of the marriage relation at will, without form of law, is common, and it is predicted will necessarily cause endless trouble. Maj. A. E. Woodson of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, in Oklahoma, reports: "The mother-in-law is much in evidence among these people. She makes herself a 'holy terror' unless the family affairs are conducted according to her ideas. Much of the agent's time is occupied in the settlement of family quarrels." Many of the Indian agents recommend discontinuance of the issuance of rations and clothing and urge the substitution of a policy of making cash payments to the Indians for a time. At the Green Bay agency, in Wisconsin, the tribe is reported as retrograding, owing to factional troubles.

GREAT LOTTERY OVERTHROWN.

The Supreme Court Holds the Frankfort Charter to Be Invalid.

Justice Harlan handed down the opinion of the United States Supreme Court in the case of J. J. Douglas, plaintiff in error, against the Commonwealth of Kentucky, holding the franchise of the Frankfort lottery invalid. In rendering his opinion Justice Harlan quoted the provision of the Kentucky Constitution of 1891 revoking all lottery charters heretofore granted and forbidding the existence of lotteries in the State. He continued by quoting a former opinion of the court to the effect that "the common forms of gambling were comparatively innocuous when placed in contrast with the widespread pestilence of lotteries." The Frankfort lottery of Kentucky in twenty-two years has earned millions of dollars in Louisville from its forty-one agencies, while it is said to have received a "take-out" from receipts of offices conducted in many other cities, based on the double daily drawings in Louisville. The company was originally chartered in 1883 to raise a fund of $100,000 for the schools of Frankfort.

TO ASK AN INCREASE.

Convention of Pennsylvania Miners May Lead to Another Strike.

National President M. D. Ratchford of the United Mine-Workers' Union, arrived in Pittsburg to confer with District President Patrick Dolan in regard to the joint convention of coal operators and miners to be held next month. The present wage scale was made to settle the last strike and expires Dec. 31. According to Mr. Ratchford the miners will ask for a still further increase of wages. This may lead to another national strike, as the operators say the increase will not be granted.

ON WORD OF EX-REBELS.

Former Color Bearer T. I. Higgins Is Given a Medal for Bravery.

The Secretary of War at Washington has given a medal of honor to Thomas I. Higgins of Hannibal, Mo., who was color-bearer of an Illinois regiment during the war. At the siege of Vicksburg Higgins literally obeyed orders not to turn back, and alone pushed clear into the rebel breastworks. The medal was issued on information given by Confederate soldiers who witnessed Higgins' heroic deed.

To Shut Out America.

Charles Sonnenberg, formerly of New York, now a resident of Vryburg, in British Bechuanaland, Africa, and a member of the Cape Parliament, is on a visit to this country. He is chiefly interested in the plan of the British Government, to come up at the next session of the Cape Parliament, to break the present treaty existing among the nations of Germany, Great Britain and the United States in relation to South African goods. The United States, England fears, is getting too much of the importing business of South Africa, and it is itself anxious to take some away. Canada also wants to get a slice of the business, and is waiting to have the treaty broken that it may begin shipments of its own goods to South Africa. The commercial treaty has been in existence many years. Under it a great quantity of machinery, petroleum, furniture, agricultural implements, hardware, canned and dried fruit, fish, boots and shoes and cigarettes and tobacco are sent to South Africa by the United States. The goods are better and cheaper than can be procured in Germany and England. Many merchants do not want to pay higher duties, as the English wish them to do, according to the prospective new treaty, and they are already preparing to fight the matter. Mr. Sonnenberg says that it is of the greatest importance to the United States that this Government should take some steps at once to meet the coming fight.

Must Not Work Too Long.

By order of Assistant Postmaster General Heath it has been made an offense punishable by dismissal from the service for a letter carrier to work more than eight hours a day. This is the result of a decision by the Supreme Court upholding the claim of one A. H. Post, a letter carrier at Salt Lake City, for overtime under the eight-hour law of 1888. Claims aggregating $200,000 have been brought by Chicago carriers, and claims aggregating $8,000,000 have been presented from other free-delivery stations. Commissioners were appointed and are now at work adjusting these claims, and it is hoped to get them settled this year.

Big Fire Loss at St. Louis.

Fire was discovered in the F. O. Sawyer & Co. paper factory in Locust street, St. Louis, and within an hour the establishment was in ruins and a number of adjoining buildings were badly damaged. The general loss is estimated at over $100,000. The building contained highly inflammable material and was soon a roaring furnace, the fire communicating across the narrow street to the Economic bindery plant, the Young-McKinney Printing Company, the Missouri Engraving Company, Woodward-Tiernan Printing Company and Higgens Map-Printing Company.

Thorn Killed Guldensupps.

Martin Thorn, accused of the murder of William Guldensuppe, the Turkish bath rubber, was pronounced guilty by the jury at New York. Thorn received the verdict with a laugh, but he seemed to have lost his nerve as he was led back to jail. The court denied a motion for a new trial and set the day for the passing of the sentence.

Carnegie Captures a City.

Andrew Carnegie, the great Pennsylvania iron manufacturer, has written a letter saying he will give $10,000 to the endowment of the Mechanics' Institute at Richmond, Va.

The Earth Trembled.

A light earthquake shock startled the citizens of Wichita, Kan., at 12:53 on a recent morning. Telephone messages from Wellington and Hunnewell, Kan., describe the earthquake as quite violent in those cities. It reached south into Oklahoma. Specials from Pratt and Kingman, Kan., near the Oklahoma boundary, say slight earthquake shocks were felt at those places. No damage appears to have been done. At Pratt a distinct shock was experienced at 12:58 a. m. It was not severe, but strong enough to cause furniture to rock and lamps and dishes to rattle. The disturbance lasted about three seconds. The shock at Kingman was felt at 1 a. m. Vibrations were from north to south, lasting about ten seconds. No damage, so far as known. At 1:30 an earthquake shock of considerable energy was felt at Arkansas City. Many people were alarmed and rushed from their rooms. The shock lasted ten seconds. No damage resulted.

MAXIM'S AIRSHIP IS A GO.

Inventor Has Solved the Problem of Aerial Navigation.

A special from New Kensington, Pa., states: If what Hiram S. Maxim claims is true, aerial navigation is an accomplished fact. Mr. Maxim, who is the inventor of the Maxim gun, says he has traveled across the continent and back to his starting place in such an airship. Indeed, it was his strange craft which aroused such extraordinary interest last summer and which was reported having been seen at Denver, Chicago, St. Louis and other Western cities. Mr. Maxim's craft is cigar-shaped, conical at both ends, with an upright aeroplane at the stern for steering apparatus. The skin of the ship is double and filled with hydrogen gas. Every part of the ship and motive power is made of aluminum; the motive power being naphtha. The whole thing weighs 5,000 pounds, occupies 106,000 cubic feet of space, can attain easily a speed of 100 miles an hour, and will carry passengers and freight parcels. New Kensington aluminum furnished the material. Mr. Maxim's company is the Atlantic and Pacific Aerial Navigation Company, of which C. A. Smith and M. A. Terry, well-known business men of San Francisco, are respectively president and secretary. A trip to the Klondike will be made soon.

BURNED IN LAKE HURON.

Steamer Egyptian Total Loss—Heroic Work Life Savers.

The steamer Egyptian, bound from Cleveland to Milwaukee with a cargo of coal, burned to the water's edge in Lake Huron, off Sturgeon Point. The fire was discovered by the Sturgeon Point life-saving crew. The crew of the burned steamer were taken off by the steamer Sir William Fairbairn of the Bessemer fleet. All hands were saved. The steamer will land the rescued men at Detroit. There were twelve vessels around the Egyptian during the early part of the fire, but by the time the life savers reached her they were all gone. Without help of any kind at hand, the life savers were compelled to leave the Egyptian, without doing anything, after rowing about thirty-five miles in weather nearly to zero. The Egyptian was owned by Nelson S. Whipple of Detroit.

This Done, Strikes End.

Chief P. M. Arthur of the Brotherhood of Railway Locomotive Engineers, Chief Sargent of the Locomotive Firemen and Chief Powell of the Telegraphers' Union are in Washington to further labor legislation at the coming session of Congress. Special efforts will be made to obtain the passage of a compulsory arbitration law for the settlement of disputes between employers and employes. The Phillips bill will be revived, and labor organizations in all sections of the country will unite in supporting it. Another measure in which the labor leaders are interested is that providing for the appointment of a national labor commission.

Exciting Chase for Robbers.

At West Unity, O., Samuel Ayres, with $600 in his pocket, was assaulted by a highwayman. Ayres held on to his money and the robber, after shooting him in the chest, fled. A short time afterward William Shultz's residence was broken into, the thieves securing $100. Scotts Brown's valuable team was stolen a few days later, and the citizens banded together and gave chase. They came upon the suspected highwayman who held his pursuers at bay and finally escaped.

Desperate Fight for a Woman.

A three-cornered duel took place at Huntsville, Ark. Seth Lowe, Will Phillips and John Howard, three farmers, were in love with the same girl, Miss Irene Pruitt. Miss Pruitt went to prayer meeting with Phillips. A fight ensued, in which the three men were fatally injured.

Quincy Named Amid a Storm.

Josiah Quincy was nominated for Mayor of Boston on the Democratic ticket in one of the stormiest conventions ever held there. Every speaker, no matter what he had to say, was hissed and cheered, till the convention appeared more like a riot than a deliberative meeting.

Large Gold Output.

The gold output of the Cripple Creek district in November was $1,258,600, the largest for one month in the history of the camp.

President's Mother Ill.

Mrs. Nancy Allison McKinley, mother of the President, was stricken with paralysis at Canton, Ohio.

KAISER IS DEFIED

CHINA'S EMPEROR WILL NOT YIELD.

Refuses to Agree to the Demands of Germany—He Desires to Submit the Entire Matter to Arbitrators—Martial Law at Kiaochou Bay.

Rather Lose His Crown.

A special dispatch from Shanghai announces that the Emperor of China has declared that he would rather forfeit his crown than agree to the conditions demanded by Germany as redress for the murder of two German missionaries—Nies and Hennle—and the destruction of German mission property in the Province of Shantung. Admiral Diedrich, the German commander of Kiaochou Bay, the dispatch further states, has proclaimed martial law in the district around Kiaochou. China, the dispatch concludes, desires that her dispute with Germany be submitted to arbitrators to be appointed by Holland and Belgium.

Last July a Chinese mob attacked the Christian mission at Kiaochou Bay, which is a point in the Yellow Sea, in the Province of Shan-Tung, about 300 miles north of Shanghai. The mission was in charge of two missionaries named Nies and Hennle, who had succeeded in attracting to their schools a very generous following of Chinese youth. The attack was made in broad daylight, and the buildings were burned. When Nies and Hennle, the missionaries, tried to dissuade the rioters from acts of violence toward the native converts there was an instant attack made upon the Germans themselves.

Both Fatally Wounded.

The two Europeans were attacked with swords and clubs, and, before they could defend themselves, both had been mortally wounded. They were at once thrown upon the burning ruins of the mission, where they died.

Refugees from the dismantled school at once communicated the facts to the nearest representatives of the German nation and the news provoked a storm of indignant protest as soon as it was repeated in Berlin. Steps to punish the perpetrators of the deed were at once put on foot. A German war ship was dispatched to the Yellow Sea and Nov. 22 the admiral in command landed a force of marines on the shore of the bay, which was commanded by a Chinese port with a garrison of 1,500 men. The admiral, protected by the man-of-war, commanded the Chinese general to withdraw his soldiers from the fort and the latter did so, claiming the protection of the admiral. The Chinese soldiers ran in complete disorder into the fastnesses of the hills, abandoning their position, which the Germans at once occupied.

A demand was made upon the Chinese Government for an indemnity on account of the slaughter of the missionaries and the destruction of school property. Pending a settlement of that question the German force maintained its position on land and the man-of-war remained in the adjacent waters for the purpose of affording any needed protection.

Russia May Interfere.

It is said that the Chinese ministers have appealed for support to Russia, and that the czar has intimated that a continuance of German occupation will be regarded as an act of hostility to the Russian nation and damaging to Russian interests.

Emperor William, at the recent opening of the German parliament, clearly foreshadowed the forcible occupation of a port in Chinese waters, and his address left little room to expect that the force there would be withdrawn. In addition, it is well known that a gunboat which had been ordered to Hayti to settle a little difficulty which the Berlin Government had in the West Indies has been recalled, and is now on its way to the China Sea. By the time Russian protests can be considered at Berlin it is likely Emperor William's naval and land forces will be so strongly established on the shore of China that they will not easily be dislodged.

REPORT AS TO ARMOR PLANTS

Naval Board Files Its Findings with Secretary Long.

The naval board appointed by authority of Congress to ascertain the cost of an armor plant made its report through Commodore Howell to Secretary Long Wednesday. The cost of a plant suitable for the making of naval armor at the rate of about 6,000 tons per annum, which is fully equal to the capacity of both the existing private plants, is set down as about $3,750,000. No recommendation is made, but the board has accumulated much information as to the merits of various eligible locations.

Secretary Long will now proceed to take the next step necessary to carry out the wish of Congress, namely, invite proposals by advertisement for building such a plant as that designed for the use of the Government. It is expected that Congress will be advised of the offers made by both the existing armor-making concerns to sell out to the Government, and also of other interests to turn over plants, which, while not at all like the specifications of the board, will permit of alteration into effective plants. Secretary Long will make it quite evident the Government cannot undertake to make its own armor at the cost named as the limit of price to be paid to private firms in the last naval appropriation bill.

PRAYER FAILS TO HEAL.

Miss Helen Ash Dies Despite Christian Science Theories.

Several days ago Miss Helen Ash, the daughter of Mrs. I. N. Ash, living at 221 East Forty-seventh street, Chicago, was taken seriously ill. Mrs. Ash, who is a member of the Kenwood Club, and a firm believer in Christian Science, decided that she would treat the illness of her daughter without the aid of a physician. Miss Ash was also a Christian Scientist, and agreed with her mother in regard to the treatment of her ailments. They decided to resort only to prayer as a curative of the disease.

For a short time the fervent prayers seemed to be answered, and the girl gained in strength. But the ailment took a firmer hold on its victim, and she grew gradually weaker. The mother lengthened the seasons of worship and the daughter became more earnest in her prayers for health. But in spite of the rigid manner in which the Christian Science doctrine was carried out the daughter grew gradually worse until Tuesday evening, when she died.

PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

A Decrease of $11,338,125 Noted for the Month of November.

The December statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business Nov. 30 the public debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,009,226,466, a decrease since Oct. 30 of $11,338,125. This decrease is accounted for by an increase in the cash due to the deposit of an installment of the proceeds of the sale of the Government's interest in the Union Pacific. But for this transaction the cash in the treasury would have been $771,450 less than last month. The cash in the treasury is classified as follows:

Gold, $194,089,260; silver, $507,656,382; paper, $105,756,181; bonds, disbursing officers' balances, etc., $38,907,251; total, $846,409,076; against which there are demand liabilities amounting to $625,745,516, leaving the net cash balance $220,663,559.

The comparative statement of the Government receipts and expenditures shows that the total receipts for the month of November were $43,363,605, of which $18,194,618 was received from the reorganization committee of the Union Pacific Railroad, making the ordinary receipts for the month $25,168,987. The total expenditures for November were $37,810,838, of which $4,549,368 was cash in the Union Pacific sinking fund turned into the treasury and repaid to the appropriation from which it had been originally drawn for investment. Hence the month's disbursements include this sum. The ordinary receipts for the month, therefore, were $25,168,987 and the ordinary disbursements $33,261,470, leaving a deficit of $8,092,483. The receipts from customs were $9,830,025, a falling off of about $100,000 as compared with November, 1896. The receipts from internal revenue were $13,530,649, a gain of about $430,000 for the month.

RIOT IN PRAGUE.

Howling Masses Take Possession of the City.

There were fresh disturbances in Prague, Bohemia Wednesday. The houses of Germans were bombarded with stones and a howling mob which gathered on Wensel-Platz had to be dispersed by infantry and cavalry. The university buildings were threatened by the rioters, and had to be protected by large bodies of police. During the afternoon the riots increased. The synagogue windows were smashed and the windows of the houses of Jews displaying German trade signs in several streets of the Jewish quarter.

In spite of the military a large Czech mob made a descent during the evening upon the German quarter and plundered houses and shops in several streets. The furniture of a well-known German cafe was piled up in the street and set on fire. When a detachment of troops approached to disperse the rioters the soldiers were greeted with showers of stones, broken glass and other missiles. The officer in command ordered his troops to prepare to fire, but at the urgent request of a police official the order was not carried into effect.

Shortly after 9 o'clock a mob attempted to storm a cartridge factory at Zischow, a suburb of Prague, on the other side of the Moldau. Troops stationed at the factory poured a volley into the crowd. Several persons were killed outright and others were wounded. The same body of rioters set fire to a house at Zischow, but the flames were soon quenched. In various other parts of the city and the suburbs windows were smashed and German sign boards demolished. It is said that the mob was incited by articles in the Czech newspapers and by false reports that the German students had organized an attack upon the Czech national theater.

TO IMPROVE CROP REPORTS.

Statistician Hyde Says the Present System Is Cumbrous.

The annual report of the statistician of the Department of Agriculture, John Hyde, was issued Wednesday. It is devoted mainly to criticism of the cumbrous and unbusinesslike crop reporting system that has been in use in the department during the last few years, and to recommendations looking to an improvement of the system.

Mr. Hyde states that his brief official connection with the division has been sufficient to impress him strongly with the extreme cumbrousness of the existing system of crop reporting; with the fact that the information obtained is utterly incommensurate with the labor involved in its collection, and with the disadvantage under which the farmer labors in being placed in possession so much less promptly than other citizens of the information which the department publishes from time to time concerning the condition of crops in this and other countries.

Carload of Canceled Mortgages.

Charles Harris, a member of the Kansas Legislature, is working up a scheme to collect and take to the Omaha exposition a carload of canceled Kansas mortgages.

Spain evidently is going to have a terrible time trying to pacify Weyler.

Schweinfurth has decided to remove his "heaven" to Wisconsin. Of late he has been having the other kind of a time near Rockford.

John Coffee of Little Rock wants a divorce. We don't know what the grounds are, but hope the Coffee case can be settled out of court.

Two chorus girls quarreled during a performance in New York the other night and a dispatch says that one of them "was stabbed twice between the second and third acts." It evidently is a very serious case.

The Fargo Argus reports that "Indians have recently been seen hanging around the frontier villages." Three of them were seen hanging about Williamsport the other day shortly after a mob had visited the county jail.

The Spokane Sportsman-Review says: "Col. Coyote Bill killed a big mountain lion yesterday morning, then descended the Rattlesnake river from his cabin in the mountains to Missoula and obtained a divorce in the afternoon." The colonel seems to have had a busy day.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Fire Burns the Heart Out of a Small Town—Missing Man Found Buried in the Sand—Counterfeiters Get Five Years Each—Robbery and Arson.

Farmland in Flames.

At midnight on a recent night fire broke out in the heart of the town of Farmland, and the entire business part of the town was destroyed. The amount of loss cannot be estimated. Muncie was called on for protection, and fire engines on flat cars were sent to the town. The fire started in the rear of Robert Mecks' drug store. Farmland has 2,500 people, with only a hand chemical engine as protection from fire.

Missing Man Found Dead.

The body of William Montgomery, a well-to-do farmer of Ghent, Ky., who disappeared from the steamer Lizzie Bay on the night of Aug. 6, while returning from a business trip to Cincinnati, and for whose recovery a reward of $500 was offered by his relatives, was found by two fishermen buried in the sand one mile above Vevay.

Looted and Burned by Robbers.

The general store of Bowen & Dimmitt at West Middleton was pillaged by robbers, who, after getting what they wanted, set fire to the building. The Clover Leaf Railway office was in the same building, and with contents was destroyed. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $1,800.

Each Given Five Years.

H. A. Brown and Theodore Hansen of Valparaiso, regarded by the secret service officers as very dangerous counterfeiters, were both sentenced by Judge Baker of the Federal Court at Indianapolis to five years at the penitentiary at Columbus, Ohio.

Young Baker Fatally Hurt.

Edgar Baker of Fortville, aged 17, and two companions, returning from Indianapolis in a buggy, was thrown from the rig by a sudden jolt, receiving injuries from which he died.

All Over the State.

Three hundred and fifty striking miners have returned to work in the Sullivan County district.

Chris Haller, who had trouble with his wife and then disappeared, was found in Pigeon creek, near Evansville. It was a case of suicide.

At Kings Station, Ora Bennett leaned his gun against a tree. It fell and was discharged, the entire charge striking Bennett in the upper part of the body.

C. Wolf, while crossing the Grand Trunk tracks west of Valparaiso, was run down by the local accommodation and thrown forty feet, receiving fatal injuries.

Telegrams received by relatives in Anderson and at Daleville state that James Horne of Spartansville is expected to die of blood poisoning. A week ago he was bitten by a rat.

Nineteen prisoners confined in the Gibson County jail mutinied against Sheriff Murphy and but for prompt action in suppressing the disturbance the sheriff would have been killed.

The Pennsylvania Railway Company paid Samuel Lindsey of Kokomo $1,500 for damages resulting from a collision. Suit was not brought, the amount being fixed by mutual agreement.

William O. Sidener and Guy O. Steele, the two postoffice clerks from Crawfordsville who were caught stealing money from the mails, were each sent to the penitentiary for one year.

At Terre Haute, Alexander Owens, a marble dealer, became enraged at Alexander Lawrence, an employe at the cemetery, and struck him a fatal blow as they stood on opposite sides of a grave.

An appointment of a receiver for the Masonic Mutual Benefit Association at Indianapolis is asked. The executor of the estate of George W. Leighton of Jasper avers that the association is unable to pay a death claim of $2,000.

Ex-County Treasurer Holdeman of Elkhart, whose accounts are short about $25,000, has disappeared. He is believed to have gone to Chicago. Before his departure he turned over all his property, amounting to $40,000, to his bondsmen.

A circular saw burst in the spoke and heading factory of B. G. Ackerman at Marion, resulting in the instant death of Will Patterson, 19 years of age. Pieces of the shattered saw split him almost in twain from his waist to the top of his head.

John Day, an evangelist, while speaking at Prairieton, said there were only two men in the town who were not hypocrites, whereupon Justice of the Peace Smith called him a liar. He had the justice arrested for disturbing a religious meeting.

Will Perdue, while riding to his home six miles south of Muncie in an open buggy, fell out of the seat upon his head and broke his neck. The attending physicians say it is a complete fracture of the spinal bone and are mystified at the man being still alive.

James T. Sturgeon, a prominent farmer and stock buyer, was shot and instantly killed at Rockford by Harry Horter, 16 years old. The cause of the killing was the attentions paid by the dead man to the boy's mother. Sturgeon leaves a widow and a large family of children.

Rev. F. X. Logan, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church at Rushville, was held up and robbed in his own house by a well-dressed stranger, who asked the priest to go on a sick call. Father Logan was then pushed from the house and compelled to seek assistance in his night clothes, while the robber took his own time in going through the house. He escaped.

Alexander Wilhelm, one of the best-known young members of the bar of South Bend, has mysteriously disappeared, and it is feared he may have committed suicide. His disappearance is due to financial troubles.

Center lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows has filed a suit in the Circuit Court at Indianapolis to prevent the carrying out of the present plans to build the new $200,000 grand lodge Odd Fellows' temple. It claims an ownership in the present grand lodge property and demands that the property be sold for the partition of the proceeds.

Attorney E. J. Tobin leaped from the platform of a Pan-Handle passenger train near Logansport while the train was moving at a speed of forty miles an hour. He was being taken to Chicago to answer to an indictment returned by the grand jury charging him with conspiracy to defraud. He is still at large.

John Devault, a farmer living near Ligonier, has been missing since Sept. 10. On that date Devault left his home for a visit in Ohio. On Oct. 12 his wife received a letter from him stating that he was starting for home and since then nothing can be learned of him. He was last seen in Columbus, O., where he had been visiting some relatives.

DEFECTS IN ELEVATORS.

An Air Cushion the Latest Scheme to Prevent Injury If the Car Falls.

The elevator is a labor and time saving device in such common use that no consideration should stand in the way of reducing to a minimum the element of danger. Yet accidents occur so frequently that it would seem as if progress toward safety had stopped.

AIR CUSHION FOR ELEVATORS.

Only in very rare cases does a car "drop." This could happen only if all the cables supporting it should part. In the great majority of accidents the car "runs away," or gets beyond the control of the operator, and nothing can prevent disaster but an automatic device which will stop the car gradually. No such device which can be absolutely depended upon is now in use.

Manufacturers are unanimous in declaring the average "elevator man" or "boy" is incapable of properly operating an elevator. No elevator is simple. The passenger does not see and could not understand the complicated mechanism necessary to its working. Yet these delicate machines are often placed in charge of ignorant boys or men whose qualifications are limited to a superficial understanding of the working power and safety devices.

The engineer of a locomotive must pass a severe examination and serve an apprenticeship before he is intrusted with the lives of passengers, and even gripmen and motormen operate their cars for a long time under the eye of an experienced man. A 16-year-old engineer or motorman would never be employed. It is suggested that cars should be placed in charge only of men who are old enough to be clear-headed, who have passed a suitable examination as to knowledge and general fitness.

A scheme which is in use in a few buildings and has given good satisfaction is an air cushion in the bottom of the shaft. The lower part of the shaft for a distance of several feet is made air tight. When a falling car drops into this "tube" the air below it acts as a cushion, and the stop is made gradual by the escape of the air around the sides of the car. For experiment a car has been dropped repeatedly 125 feet into one of these cushions, and stoppage was not of sufficient abruptness to break eggs on the car floor.

A ONE-WHEEL SULKY.

Its Lightness of Weight and Running May Revolutioinze Trotting.

A one-wheel sulky has been invented by Thomas G. Coleman, of Texas, who believes it will revolutionize trotting records. The vehicle, as its name implies, has only one big wheel. The wheel is tired with a pneumatic tube. The frame of the carriage, for the sake of lightness, strength and elasticity, is made of aluminum tubing, and the shafts are of the same construction.

A sulky of such a pattern ought to travel at a phenomenal rate with a capable trotter between the shafts. Its weight is almost nothing, and its contact with mother earth is of the slightest. Of course it would not stand upright without help when stationary, but attached to the two shafts are a couple of hinged legs, which prevent any possibility of tipping over. When starting off, the legs, by an automatic device, fold themselves up alongside of the shafts and are out of the way.

INDIAN CENSUS PAPER.

How the Chippewa Enumerator Reported His Band.

This symbolical census paper of an Indian band was drawn and given in to an agent by Nago-nabe, a Chippewa Indian, during the progress of the annuity payment in 1849. It represents in pictographic characters each family in the band by its name and numbers. Thus Fig. 2 denotes a man shooting at a mark; No. 5, a catfish; No. 7, a beaver skin; No. 8, the sun; No. 11, an eagle; No. 12, a snake; No. 19, a buffalo, and so on. The marks in each division indicate the number of persons in each family.

Great Gathering of Game.

F. J. Tracy, of Staceyville, Maine, had an interesting and rather exciting experience a short time ago while in the woods on an exploring trip. He made his camp by the side of a small pond about fifteen acres in extent, which abounds in trout, and is a gathering place for big game. He was standing near this pond when he saw at one time fourteen deer, three moose, and four black ducks, all within rifle shot.

LIFE.

A crust of bread and a corner to sleep in,
A minute to smile and an hour to weep in,
A pint of joy to a peck of trouble,
And never a laugh but the moans come double;
And that is life!

A crust and a corner that love makes precious,
With the smile to warm and the tears to refresh us;
And joy seems sweeter when cares come after,
And a moan is the finest of foils for laughter;
And that is life!
—Paul Lawrence Dunbar.

Simpson's Ranch.

"I don't see no sense in it, nohow." It was the older of two stalwart "cow-punchers" that delivered this oracular statement. In private life he was once probably Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones, but this must have been in days which were prehistoric as far as his fellows in the cattle country were concerned. To them he was, and had always been, "Broncho Sam"; and old Bill Kensett, up on the divide, whose age was beyond mortal ken, and who was a stalwart man when he trapped with Ruxton and traded with St. Vrain, was on record as saying that he "allowed that when thet thar youngster come from the States he hedn't no other name than Broncho Sam." That settled it.

"Thet thar youngster" was a relative, certainly not a positive, characterization; for Broncho Sam was a veteran, and he looked it as he sat on a rude bench, outside the ruder log cabin, and facing the west. To an Eastern eye his surroundings were the abomination of desolation. The cabin stood in a narrow valley, near the bed, almost dry, of what might be a stream. To the gray banks inclosing it a few stunted and distorted cedars were precariously clinging, and at a distance there were some patches of sage-brush. As unwise, indeed, were he who should look at these things to the exclusion of distant ones, as he who should curiously inspect the squalid streets of Naples when by lifting his eyes he could see across the beautiful bay to the grand silhouette of Vesuvius, with Sorrento and Capri in the distance. Here, above the barren outlines of grim canons, above the sparsely wooded foot-hills, above the jagged outlying peaks, rose in its simple majesty the great range. Across the exquisite blue sky overhead drifted clouds as white as the driven snow, and light and fleecy as those under which once lay the Isles of the Blest. It was near sunset, after the radiance of an autumn day, and the air was deliciously clear, cool and bracing.

Broncho Sam was not looking at the mountain or sky, but at a gun which he was cleaning. His companion, a younger man and evidently a disciple, had been watching his skillful manipulation, and listening to the words of wisdom which fell from his lips, for a famed ranch manager was this same Broncho Sam; and fortunate were his employers, far away in "the States," whose interests were intrusted to his faithful care.

Then came a voice through the open door—a fresh, youthful, ringing voice:

"Just you wait a minute, Sam, and I'll come out and argue the point with you. I have not an idea what you are talking about, but I say there is some sense in it; and what is it all about, anyway?"

Sam uttered an unintelligible grunt. It could not have one of entire dissatisfaction, for something like a smile showed itself on his rugged features, and was plainly visible as he looked up and saw Jack Reynolds standing in the doorway. A handsome young fellow he was, and a general favorite in all the region for fifty miles round. Ever since he came out from Chicago—whence the doctor sent him after a long illness—he had added as steadily to his list of friends as to the hardness of his muscles, the color in his cheeks, and the figure at which he turned the scale.

"Blame me if he don't jest lay over any tenderfoot I ever see," said Broncho Sam, one day, as he stood in an admiring crowd at the bar of the Arcade saloon in Pueblo. "Gimme a show, and I'll make him a first-class ranch hand in a year or two."

"He ain't no slouch of a ranchman now, accordin' to my idee," said a rash new-comer.

Sam looked at him with an undisguised contempt, clearly shared by the bystanders. "Perhaps he is, an' perhaps he ain't," said he. "I allow you oughter know better'n I. Yes, Jim, yer may gimme another one of the same sort."

Jack, it may easily be believed, was the soul of the ranch. He interested himself in the operations, and made a creditable figure at the first "round up." He could soon ride the worst of the "bucking" horses, and throw a lariat with many an older man. He was a bit of a dandy too, in his way, and did not disdain a gilt cord with pendent tassels around the crown of an expensive sombrero, a gay necktie loosely knotted and lying snugly under the riding collar of his gray flannel shirt, or a pair of long riding boots of exceptional make. All this finery, however, was reserved for other places than the ranch, and other occasions than the days passed there. The most cynical of "old-timers" found nothing to criticise in his display thereof when he rode into Pueblo for a day of combined business and pleasure; and, in a way, they felt a local pride in one who could hold a certificate of competency from such a Sir Hubert as Broncho Sam, and at the same time be, by the canons of that longitude, a very respectable "swell." More than one young lady member of some party of "personally conducted" tourists had looked admiringly at him from the window of the Denver Pullman as he sat on his horse near the station platform; and the landlord of the Arcade saloon was understood to have, in a rare interval of sobriety, expressed the opinion that such an exhibition was good for the interests of the region. "Why," said he, "thar ain't no two ways about it. When them thar tenderfeet an' fancy tourists sees an outfit like thet, they'll kind o' think ranchin' is a boss business, an' it'll put 'em to comin' out here an' buyin' land, an' startin' a boom in ranches an' helpin' trade. Yer see, they'll think all ranchmen is like him, an' they'll git mighty badly left; but thet ain't your funeral nor mine. Say, young feller, what'll yer take? Nothin'? Wa'al, suit yerself."

Three miles above the ranch where Jack lived was another, of rather better character as regarded its buildings, which stood close to the bed of the creek. It belonged to a man named Simpson. Most people liked him; few knew him well. There was a vague impression abroad that Simpson had a history, and that his ownership of a Western ranch was but an episode in a life far different from that which most of his neighbors had been born to; but there was that about him which repelled inquisitiveness. His cattle were numerous and in good condition; he was active and efficient in the round-up, but his patronage of the Arcade saloon was of the scantiest, and he was somewhat eccentric in the making up of what in another and more formal state of society would have been a visiting-list. Those, however, who had enjoyed the hospitalities of Simpson's ranch had much to say of a wife who often wore "store clothes," and of a daughter of about nineteen, as pretty a girl, it was reported, as had ever been seen from Denver down to Cucharas, and as bright as the sunlight on the plains. Not many had seen her; few still knew her; yet her fame had gone abroad. She was graciously idealized; she was held to belong, in a sense, to the region; and there was not a cowboy on the range who would not have broken a lance (or, what was far more practical, emptied his "gun") as her champion.

Among the visitors at Simpson's Ranch we may be sure that Jack Reynolds was numbered. His first visit was made at a notable time in its history. Two days before (stopping to return a horse which he had found straying) he had made the acquaintance of the family. Simpson himself had suddenly gone away. He had been in Pueblo, and the postmaster stated at the Arcade that he had received a large and thick letter, but he was a little misty as to the postmark. That night Simpson departed. Some people thought he rode a little to the northward, and took a train at a small station. A theory that he secreted himself in a freight car also found supporters. But one individual, and he was half inebriated, had suggested suicide, and he had been promptly ejected from the saloon by the force of public opinion.

Months and months had passed, and Simpson had not appeared. Wonder grew as to his whereabouts; much curiosity was engendered as to the condition and feelings of his family, and no little effort was made to gratify this curiosity. Whatever the wife and daughter, thus seemingly deserted, may have felt, however, they gave no sign to visitors. No one was there half so often as Jack Reynolds, and there was a general, if unspoken, sentiment abroad that this was as it should; also that it would be alike improper and futile to seek for any information about Simpson from him. No better test, indeed, could there be of the esteem in which he was held than this rare self-abnegation.

Again several months passed, and still there appeared no Simpson. His neighbors were more puzzled, more curious, more hopelessly in the dark, than ever, and they began to feel aggrieved. Broncho Sam had been voicing this sentiment, in conversation with his assistant, when he made the declaration with which this story opens, and which was preceded by another.

"I jest tell yer," said he, "that when a man lights out and leaves sech a good-appearin' wife an' sech a pooty little gal ez is up to Simpson's, an' don't send 'em no word, it's playin' it pretty low on 'em, onless he's got a blamed good reason for a doin' so."

That he would discuss this point with Jack was highly improbable. They talked of cattle and the season's prospects, and there was no word of Simpson during the plain supper or the placid pipe-smoking which followed. When they "turned in," the sky was overcast, and during the night there came a gale of wind which almost shook the house. It was in the gray of early morning that a violent knocking at the door brought all three men to their feet alert in an instant. Jack was the first at the door, and opened it. A man stood there holding the bridle of a panting horse. His words were few and to the point. There had been a storm and cloudburst in the mountains; the great reservoir which fed the irrigating ditches was in imminent peril; there would be a terrible "wash-out" in the valley.

"Have you warned them at Simpson's?" asked Jack, breathlessly.

"I came the other way."

Broncho Sam had his eyes on Jack's face, and saw the color leave it. He rose to the occasion in an instant.

"Yer 'kin do it, my boy," said he; "but jest yer ride like Jehu. Git yer boots on, an' I'll have the saddle on Comanche."

In five minutes Jack, with his head bent to the blast, was spurring his horse wildly up the valley.

There was nothing aesthetic about the external appearance of Simpson's ranch. The architecture of the house was of the early cow-boy period, with suggestions of that of the mining camp. There was a severe simplicity about the roughly hewn logs which made up the walls, and although the freaks of fashion bring many queer things into popular use, the plastering of crevices with adobe has not yet been naturalized in polite neighborhoods. Never, however, should the wise traveler in the West or Southwest judge of the kernel by the shell, of the interior by the exterior. Both Mrs. Simpson and her daughter possessed the rare and charming "gift of practical management," which Hawthorn has ascribed to little Phoebe, in "The House of the Seven Gables." "It is a kind of natural magic," he says, "that enables these favored ones to bring out the hidden capabilities of things about them; and particularly to give a look of comfort and habitableness to any place which for however brief a period may happen to be their home."

So did cheap and simple material take new character and virtue from their hands; so were rough walls hidden by chintz of tasteful pattern and homogeneous tint; so did refinement supply the place of costly equipment. Jack Reynolds realized all this the first time he entered the building. To be sure, he saw it under favorable circumstances.

The daughter of the house had come out to meet him as he approached. When she saw it was her own favorite horse he had brought home, her face lighted up by a smile which went straight to his heart. Before his visit came to an end he discovered that her name was Edith. What more he discovered about her no one but himself would know; but it could not have been otherwise than pleasant, for he arrived at his home in the highest spirits. He counted the days until he thought he might call again, and he made them as few as he possibly could. It was strong evidence of Broncho Sam's partiality for his young friend that he took but mild exception to what must surely be a detraction to an embryo cow-boy; but then Sam himself had seen the young lady, and her grace and sweetness had made an impression on even his case-hardened sensibilities.

"Thar ain't no kind o' use in talkin' about it," said he; "it's human natur. I'm an old man now, but I was young once myself an' I know. He's a fellow thet's got sand, an' she's a real good appearin' gal an' I allow it ain't no one's business but theirs."

The road up the valley was narrow and rough; one side was often much higher than the other; and many furrows and holes lay as pitfalls before the rider. All riders, however, had not such horses as Comanche. He knew what was expected of him. With a splendid stride he went over the difficult path as if over English turf, clearing this treacherous gully with a spring, swerving to avoid that pile of earth washed down by the evening's rains, leaving one landmark after another behind in his headlong course. They talk to this day of the time in which he made the distance.

Jack sat him like the good horseman he was. His excitement was intense, but every faculty seemed under perfect control. One thinks and remembers at such times with unwonted quickness and vividness. Not knowing what duty or peril awaited him, nerved for whatever it might be, he still found himself wondering whether Sam and the other man could get the horses to a place of safety. Then he thought, for what seemed to him a long time, but was probably a few seconds, of his far-away home. Then the absorbing theme of what he must soon encounter took the place of all else. The horse began to breathe a little hard, but his pace never slackened. At one time Jack fancied he heard hoofs behind him, but he dismissed the idea as absurd. The next moment he saw something which made his heart beat fast. What had shown itself in the gray light of dawn as a slender turbid rill was now a large stream, and rapidly growing higher. Instinctively he called to his horse. Faster the noble animal sped on; the water was around his feet. There was a turn in the valley where it narrowed; a surging torrent reached his knees as he rounded the point of the cliff. In five minutes he slackened his pace, for there, parting the flood which eddied around it, tugged and tore at it, hurled logs and stumps and tree trunks at it, was Simpson's ranch, and at the window on the lower side was Edith.

In the lee, as it were, of the house, the water was comparatively quiet and shallow. In a second he was at the window, the horse standing still, with heaving flanks and laboring breath. There was scant time for ceremony, but the expression of joy on the girl's face told the story, and he managed to reach her hand with his. Only a few words passed at first. Her mother had spent the night with a sick child at a ranch on the hill. At daybreak, alarmed at the prospect of the "wash-out," the hands had gone to look after the stock, and the Mexican woman to escort her mother back. Then the flood had come suddenly and cut off their return.

Jack always said his plan of rescue was pure inspiration. At the right, separated from the house by a wide and deep torrent the ground sloped from a mesa. Could he reach that slope. He loked around the corner of the house, the horse barely maintaining his footing. Half-way up the slope, and a few rods above the house, stood the stout stump of a cedar, and his lariat hung at his saddle bow. How he blessed his practice with it! The first cast was successful, the loop lay over the stump, and a pull tightened it. In a moment he was back at the window; in another, Edith, stepping from the sill, sat behind him and clung to him. Again he guided Comanche to the corner; he wound the lariat around the pommel of the Mexican saddle. He drew a long breath, and rode into the torrent. The thorough-bred was swept off his feet before he had gone ten yards, but he swam strongly and boldly; the lariat was taut as a bowstring, but it held. It seemed an hour before the middle of the stream was reached. His breath beat fast; the girl said nothing, but he felt her clasp tighten; and still the horse swam on, and the torrent, balked by the stout lariat of its prey, actually aided their escape. They neared the slope; Comanche gained his footing; they were saved! Jack had never taken his eyes off the horse's head and the knot on the pommel, and he had never seen a stalwart bearded man gallop down the slope and jump from his horse just before they gained the land. Now, to his amazement, this man lifted Edith from Comanche and folded her in his arms. Shortly he raised his head.

"You needn't look so sort o' surprised, young feller," said he; "you bet it's all right. I haven't got a card case about me, but my name's Simpson, and—and—" His manner changed in a second. "God bless you, for as plucky and clever a thing as I ever saw in all my life. He will bless you, too, for you've saved the life of my little girl, that's the apple of my eye." Still clasping his daughter tightly with his left arm, he wrung Jack's hand, and the tears stood in his eyes.

Just then, with many a crack and groan, and almost, one would say, a cry of distress, Simpson's Ranch house was torn from its frail foundations and swept down the valley.

"Never mind; let her go," cried he. "I'll buy a dozen blamed old shanties like that for you to-morrow, if you want 'em."

Next day all the neighborhood knew that Simpson had come back, and why he went away; how the partner who had defrauded and nearly ruined him years before had written him from his sick-bed in his refuge in Manitoba; how he had made restitution; how Simpson had been for months beyond the region of mails and telegraphs; how he had come home and ridden up the valley behind Jack.

"I didn't know you were ahead of me," he told him. "Of course it was my horse you heard; but I knew a short-cut to the mesa, and turned off by it; but you were too quick for me. Oh, yes, I know; it's all right. I wouldn't cross the little girl, anyway. If she's willing, I am; and if she's going to leave her old father, I'm mighty glad she's going to have a man to take care of her that's got sand."

INDIA'S CHIEF IDOLS.

Brahma the Creator, Vishnu the Preserver, and Siva the Destroyer.

Great is the number of idols in India, for popular report puts the number down as 333,000,000. Every Indian village has its especial idol, sometimes more than one. None of these idols of clay, wood or stone is supposed to be fit for worship till the consecrating words have been spoken over it by a priest.

Brahma is the supreme god of India and appears in three forms—Brahma the creator, Vishnu the preserver, and Siva the destroyer. Each of the three is supposed to be married, and thus at once we have six deities which are supreme in India.

Vishnu, the preserver, the most popular and most worshipped, is shown black and likewise with four arms, and as in a struggle of the gods with the demons he killed a woman he was condemned to be born twenty-two times as a fish, a tortoise, a bear and a lion among other animals. His many manifestations in animal form are likewise popular. His wife, Lakshmi, is the goddess of prosperity and good luck. She is represented as a lovely woman with a gold-colored face—gold being the Hindoo's ideal tint.

Very different are Siva and his wife. He is the destroyer and is represented as a man unclothed, but powdered over with ashes and having a tiger skin swathed about him. He has a third eye in the middle of his forehead. A necklace of human skulls decorates his throat, while he carries a club or trident surmounted by human heads and bones. He is also armed with a bow and an ax. His wife has several forms. At first as Sati, the faithful one, her name is given to widows who are burned alive on their husband's funeral pyres. Secondly she is Durga, the mother of the world, and is seated on a lion and dressed in red. Again, as Kali, the goddess of cruelty, she is one of the most horrible of Hindoo deities, represented as black, adorned with human skulls and hands and dancing on the body of her husband. This is not because she hates him, but because, when, according to tradition, she had finished destroying her enemies, she danced so violently the earth seemed about to be shaken to pieces, and to stop her Siva lay down among the dead, and she, not seeing him under her feet, became ashamed, and put out her tongue, which is the Bengali manner of blushing. These are the principal gods of India, selected from the reputed 333,000,000.

Men and Their Hats.

Hats, according to an English writer, on matters sartorial, are the most characteristic part of the male costume. The slouch or brigand hat gives great distinction to a spiritual and expressive face, like Tennyson's, for example, but at private theatricals, especially with a feather in it, it is capable of transforming a feeble face into that of a downright idiot's. Men in cocked hats look wonderfully alike. They confer no individuality. A general, except for his plumes, cannot be distinguished from a military medico. The top hat is in one respect worthy of the estimation in which it is held. Why should we be compelled to go to church in it is inexplicable, but it always had a religious association. When Rogers, who was not beautiful, expressed a wish to be painted in "a devotional attitude," Sydney Smith suggested it should be with his face in his hat, in which so many churchgoers seem to find spiritual calm. But there is no doubt that the top hat has a power which is the attribute of no other headgear. It may not be able to confer distinction even at its glossiest, but when it is in a state of decadence it sinks its wearer in disrespectability fathoms deep. We may talk of the aristocracy of birth, or nature's true nobility, but let the representative of either wear a bad hat, and to the eye of the observer he becomes a blackguard at once.

The Bishop's Tactful Lesson.

This story is told of an "Eastern woman" who used to be notorious among her friends for the long time it took her to dress. As the newspaper puts it: "There was no case on record of a guest who had been greeted under her roof with any degree of promptitude." Now she has reformed, and this is how the reform came about:

One evening, at a private entertainment of some kind, she encountered a certain bishop, an old friend of the family.

"Ah, my dear Mrs. Smith," remarked the ecclesiastic, "how are you? I passed your house yesterday and thought of dropping in to see you."

"And you didn't do it? That was very unkind of you."

"Well, no. You see, I said to myself, 'I have just one hour to call upon Mrs. Smith. She will take fifty-seven minutes to dress. That will leave just three for our talk. It is hardly worth while.'"—St. Louis Globe.

A Rare Mineral.

Long before it was discovered on the earth it was known that the chemical element, helium, existed in the sun. Its presence on our globe was indicated about two years ago in a rare mineral of Norway, called cleveite. Its rarity has made it costly. Recently a mine has been opened near Ryfylke, Norway, containing an abundance of cleveite rich in helium. It will sell for about $5 per pound.

Surgical Operation on the Lungs.

Among the noteworthy announcements made at the recent medical congress at Moscow was that the lungs had recently been operated on successfully.

FOOD to burn! Imagine, says the San Francisco Examiner in a full-page illustrated article on the subject, a great Western community converting into flames to produce warmth for the external body tons and tons of rich, nutritious material that might go as health-giving food to warm the inner man! Here is a consuming of food to cook other food—a burning up of the elements of bone and muscle for the purpose of preparing another lot of the same elements for digestion.

In many localities in the West the people order corn from their fuel merchants as they would order wood and coal—by the wagon load. They prefer it because it is cheaper than either of these combustibles. Corn, regnant monarch of the golden fields of the West; corn that would fill out the hollow stomachs and clothe with firm flesh the spindling shanks of the children of India; corn that might prove more precious than all the wealth of Ormus to the isolated miners on the banks of the Klondike, is the ordinary thing to burn as fuel in parts of Nebraska. It is burned by the cook in the kitchen; it sends a pleasant glow of warmth through the cozy library, where children and their elders relax to rest and watch the flickering flames; it radiates from the red-hot stove in the country store, where Nimrods swap stories during long winter evenings. It sends the wheels of industry revolving in great factories that darken the heavens with their smoke.

And of course all this has served to cheapen corn in people's estimation of it as food. The population has been stuffed with corn-bread, hoe-cake, corn-starch, ice-cream, cornmeal mush, griddle cakes, and Indian pudding; popcorn has been a drug on the market, for the children and even the pigs had a premature Thanksgiving every day for three months; and still the cobs were mountain high.

A Nebraska paper some time ago took up the problem and offered prizes to the persons sending in the longest list of dishes whose principal ingredient should be corn; and still others for the most novel suggestion that should be at the same time practical for using stalk, husk or cob. But notwithstanding all these measures, there was no appreciable diminution of the store. What was to be done?

Presently, when the shortening days were preceded by frosty mornings and followed by chilly evenings, the problem found itself solved. The superfluity was supplying warmth and comfort all through the land. The first few bushels went on the coals with reluctance; it always seems a dreadful thing to destroy food, and one's mind keeps wandering to the Russian peasants or the natives of India or to whatever part of the world happens to be starving at that particular moment; but one soon gets used to it, as to everything else, and after all corn makes a cheerful, crackling blaze and thaws the numbness out of the fingers and toes as well as oak logs or coal do. It does not do to be too sentimental. It is not only on the farms that this new fuel is cooking the dinner, cooking itself, in many cases; but in the cities and towns people have their dinners cooked by the golden maize of the poets.

And this is not because other fuel is any scarcer than usual in Nebraska. It is all owing to the unprecedented size of the corn harvest. It was a beautiful sight when the fields of corn were still standing, when the stalks and leaves had still their tints of pale silvered over green and the only brown to be seen was the hazel shade of the tassels. There is something very effective about corn in the landscape. The big leaves give a tropical effect; and coming as it does when the first freshness of the year has gone, it gives a satisfaction to the eye which has already been preparing itself for subdued tints of maturity and decay. The corn gives a sense of reprieve, of renewed life.

Then corn has a poetical value apart from its artistic one. It is peculiarly American, for one thing. Our poets have always loved it, whether they termed it maize or simple corn. Sidney Lanier has a beautiful poem in its honor, and Longfellow devoted a whole division of Hiawatha to the tale of how the Great Spirit gave it to men for their support. Hiawatha, with fasting and prayer, besought a gift that should profit his people. A youth named Mondamin dressed in green and gold, appeared and challenged him to wrestle. Three times they tested each other's strength and in the fourth trial Hiawatha killed him, and, following his instructions, buried him and kept the weeds from off his grave:

"Till at length a small green feather
From the earth shot slowly upward,
Then another and another,
And before the summer ended
Stood the maize in all its beauty,
With its shining robes about it,
And its long, soft, yellow tresses;"

to be the support and comfort of man.

Hiawatha took the corn under his especial protection and in order that the harvest may be abundant sent Minnehaha to walk around the fields:

"Covered by her tresses only,
Clothed with darkness as a garment."

And the Great Spirit blest the harvest and showered down abundance upon the faithful people.

The poets have been fond of husking parties, too, when cider and kisses were freely partaken of and many an old-time custom prevailed. Do the maidens in Nebraska still look for red ears as a sure promise of a handsome husband?

The practical manner by which corn first came to be adopted as fuel was introduced during last winter, when a large number of inquiries were received by the Department of Agriculture of the University of Nebraska asking for information about the efficiency of corn as fuel. Prof. C. R. Richards, aided by the State Board of Transportation of Nebraska, addressed a circular letter to grain and coal dealers throughout the State asking for conservative estimates of the number of people in their vicinity who were burning corn.

Many of the replies to these letters are of interest. The information in all of them is essentially the same. From all of them it appears that a large percentage of the people in Nebraska use corn as fuel when the crop is abundant and the price low, and we may naturally infer that the same condition prevails in some of the other Western States. It is an unfortunate fact that in most of the sections where the value of corn is least, the cost of coal is greatest.

Corn and coal are now rivals. The golden cobs wave a haughty defiance to coal cars from Wyoming as they run the gauntlet of the serried ranks that stretch from horizon to horizon. Will corn be a practical fuel for the generation of power? Now it is cheap and economical for domestic use. It is cleaner and more easily handled than coal and contains but a very small amount of ash. Some special form of apparatus ingeniously adapted to the new medium utilizing as much heat as possible may increase its practicability.

DISAPPEARING FORESTS.

The Lumber Industry of Michigan and Wisconsin Must Soon Decline.

It is estimated that the output of lumber in Wisconsin and Minnesota during the year 1895 was 4,500,000,000 feet. If this amount had all been sawed into boards, a house 10 feet high and 15 feet wide, with a board door, could have been built around the globe, with enough lumber left to build a fence on each side. Bicyclists enjoy good board tracks, which are only too short to suit them, but this amount of lumber would have built a track reaching ten times around the earth. Of all the manufacturing capital invested in the State, lumbermen claim about 42 per cent., or nearly $105,200,000. This investment of capital in this industry has been on the increase, which the following statistics will show:

1870—720 establishments, with a capital of $11,448,545.

1880—704 establishments, with a capital of $19,824,059.

1890—853 establishments, with capital of $84,419,243.

The value of products from Wisconsin forests in 1890 was $52,115,739, and the amount sawed was 2,817,000,000 feet. To operate these interests $13,943,589 was invested, of which about $11,000,000 went to workmen for wages. At the present time 45,000 men are employed in the State to harvest this year's crop, and by the time the season closes $14,000,000 will have gone into the hands of the hard-working men of the forests. The forests of Wisconsin are fast disappearing. In the past twenty-four years nearly 54,000,000,000 feet of pine alone has been carried away, which, if it had been cut in boards 1 inch thick, would have made a walk 41 feet wide long enough to reach the moon, 250,000 miles distant. There is said to be remaining 5,000,000,000 feet of pine, of which 2,000,000,000 is located in Bayfield and Douglas Counties. The mill men of late have been ordering the loggers in some sections to cut all trees that are 6 inches in diameter, whereas a year ago nothing smaller was wanted than 12 inches in diameter. In the forests the stumps are 8 and 10 feet high, but these were cut ten years ago, and the average person is at a loss to know why men would go to the trouble of cutting a tree so far above the ground. When these trees became victims of the loggers they were surrounded with snow to a depth of from 7 to 10 feet, and men were obliged to cut them at the snow level. Now the order runs to cut them as low as 15 inches and not higher than 18 inches above the ground. The best portion of the tree, it is claimed, is at the butt, but an experienced lumber man says that the increase of lumber by such close cuts does not pay half the extra trouble that loggers encounter while cutting the tree.

The same conditions exist in Michigan. The lumber industry at Pere Marquette is almost ready to expire, and has already ceased to exist at Muskegon, White Hall and Grand Haven. Now a movement is on foot to manufacture shingles out of some of the stumps which remain. This idea has crept into the Badger State, and is meeting the approval of old lumber men, who believe it to be profitable in the end. According to census statistics this State manufactured 680,000,000 shingles in 1890. Whether men will resort to the stumps to increase the crop is a matter of conjecture.

Uncle Sam seems to be coming to the rescue. Not long ago he sent an agent, Filbert Roth, of Washington, to investigate the situation, and if possible to ascertain the extent of the devastation and the possibility of reforestation. He found that Marinette has nearly 1,000,000,000 feet of pine and 300,000,000 feet of hardwood. Along the Menomonee River, 3,000,000,000 feet is still to be saved, and it will take twenty years to exhaust the supply in this region. It was learned also that in some sections young pine trees are taking the place of those cut twenty years ago. There are some enthusiasts who believe that an effort should be made to replant the pine forest, but the conservative lumbermen say that it takes from fifty to one hundred years to grow pine trees to profitable proportions. Nevertheless, some have found it profitable to return to devastated forests and cut the trees that were rejected ten and twenty years ago. They claim to have made as great profit as those who handled the lumber originally.

Many of the millionaires of Wisconsin have made their money from lumber. Among them are ex-Senator Vilas, ex-Gov. Upham, Gov. Scofield, Philetus Sawyer of Oshkosh, Rusts and Ingrams of Eau Claire, the Ludingtons of Milwaukee and Senator J. H. Stout, of Menomonee.

ONE OF THE GREAT SAW MILL PLANTS IN WISCONSIN.

Lost the Connection.

The students of one of our well-known colleges for women, says the Portland Transcript, are accustomed to do their shopping in town through the medium of a certain John, who, lacking intellectual gifts, has a faculty for doing errands. John writes down his orders himself.

One day his list closed with:

"tub roz madder-1"
"choc cream 1p"
"git a string."

John pondered: "Get it where? What kind? Who had ordered it? Was it for an eye-glass, picture-cord, corset-lacing?" He couldn't remember, couldn't "git" it, and went back without any.

But the moment he saw Jenny Peters tuning her guitar at the window and heard her call out, "O John, did you do my errand?" he remembered all about it, and said to himself:

"There now, why couldn't I 'a' thought of her gita-tring—and written out so plain, too! Strange I couldn't 'a' thought o' that!"

No Wonder.

"I understand that Jones has a hard time getting along with his wife."

"How's that?"

"They ride a tandem, and the madam weighs 250 pounds."—Philadelphia Call.

What He Was After.

Congressman—So you want to serve your country, do you?

Applicant—Well, I ain't particular whether I serve my country much or not, but I should like to get an office at a good salary.—Somerville Journal.

A Discreditable Trick.

"Sputter says he is not writing for fame; he is writing for posterity."

"Well, all that I have got to say is that he is taking a mean advantage of posterity."—Detroit Free Press.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment. In fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

NOTHING FOR CUBA.

The President's Message Very Disappointing.

Everyone who reads the President's Message, must feel disappointment at the milk-and-water sentiments it shows in that part relating to Cuba. Modern history has no other such case of barbarism in was, as that shown by the Spanish Government in its treatment of the Cubans struggling for freedom. But the President gives no word of encouragement or hope, not even for the recognition of belligerent rights. It had been hoped that at least, there would be a good word said said for the Morgan resolution granting the rights of beligerents to this struggling people. No one believes that such a step would involve us in a war with Spain. It is well known, that if this nation takes this first step, all the other independent republics of the new world will follow, and Spain would at once see the folly of keeping up so hopeless a struggle to retain her colony. She would at once be face to face with the fact, that Cuba must be given up. The inhuman warfare would be brought to an end. Humanity would be the gainer, Cuba would be free and Spain herself spared from futher self-inflicted disgrace. Our senators and representatives have the power to take such steps as will give the President to understand that the people were in earnest when in last years conventions they passed resolutions favoring the cause of Cuba.

A NEW DAILY.

Goshen has a new daily paper. The old and reliable Goshen Democrat, has heretofore kept strictly to its weekly publication and refused to enter the field of country dailies. But now it steps into the procession and on Monday, Dec. 6, the first number of the Goshen Daily Democrat appeared. We compliment its publisher, Joseph A. Beane on this initial number. It is excellent, bright and newsy. It will be hard to keep it as full as this first number, but we believe he will do as near that as is possible. We also wish to compliment him on giving the daily the same name as its able progenitor the Weekly Democrat, and also on his good judgment in announcing at once the paper's future politics. This is the new way and better way. Those who try to run a neutral daily in the office of a partison weekly, will find they are not wise. That is the old way, but it is not the wisest. We wish the Goshen Daily Democrat unbounded success.

No Room for Doubt.

Proof, yes overwhelming proof can be furnished of the excellent curative qualities of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. "I caught a cold which led to a cough and pain in the chest. (pneumonia?) I bought Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and after taking one bottle of it, the cough began to disappear; when I finished taking the second bottle I was cured. Gustav Thurmaster, 49 Hickory St., Cleveland, O." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup costs but 25 cents. Take only Bull's.

NOT PROTECTED

The Dingly Bill Fails to Protect the Poor Preacher.

When Congress met on Monday, the first day of the regular session, they invited a foreign minister to open with prayer, and he did so. It was Rev. Chas. A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, England. It is reported there was deep silence, and that the "the prayer was solemn and impressive." We suppose the members, the majority of whom had been put into office on the cry of "protection for protection's sake," were busy thinking why this item had not been put into the Dingley tariff bill. And it does look too bad that a poor, but worthy American preacher should have his job taken away from him by the cheap, pauper preachers of England. We move that the Diugley bill be so amendod as to right this great wrong. The campaign promises should be held sacred.

QUITE SKILLFUL.

The business of lynching negroes in the southern states is developing rapidly into a regular industry and so skillful does frequent practice make them in certain parts of the country that it no longer requires a mob of several hundreds as it once did, but now only a few are necessary to complete the job at short notice. And also comes a later report, that so highly skilled have they become that one man can do it alone. Only a few days ago a negro assaulted the daughter of a well-known and respected farmer named Ellis. He set out at once to capture the negro and did capture him. Then he tied him hand and foot and carried him to his home and kept him there a day or two, so as to be sure that nothing would be done in a hasty or rash manner. His neighbors heard of the trouble and came in and offered their assistance and sympathy. Their sympathy was all right, but their assistance was declined with thanks. He said he know his duty and how to perform it, and the neighbors, kind-hearted neighbors went sadly away in a disappointed frame of mind. But they had faith in Ellis, and knew the good work would go on to a successful conclusion. They were right. When Ellis had got a good ready, he took his prisoner to a nearby woods, saw that his hands and feet were securely bound put a rope with the most approved hangman's knot about his heck, threw the other end over the limb of a tree and took that end himself and pulled. As his end of the rope went down the negro rose. And after he had risen, he died, The lone farmer went to his home with the air of a man who had done his duty as he saw it. All of which proves that much practice makes perfect.

That Describes the Calf David Heitz Has.

David Heitz, of DeKalb was here today, with a freak in the shape of a calf born on his farm last Friday. It has two well developed heads and necks, and apparently two spinal columns back as far as the small of the back. It lived but about twenty minutes. G. S. McCord will stuff and mount it for him. It drew crowds to see it.

BUTLER.

Nancy Hook, was buried in the cemetery east of town last Friday. Her death was caused by consumption. She was a daughter of Stephen Enzor, and relict of James Hook. She leaves one or two children.

Three of our churches are holding revival efforts. The M. E., the U. B., and Church of God. There seems to be a lack of interest, rather unusual for our place.

Eliza Cooney, living near Clarksville, Ohio, was buried in the Butler cemetery last Sunday. She was among the oldest children of James Reyett, and well known by our older residents as Eliza Leonard. She leaves an aged husband and grown up children.

John Champion has been quite poorly for the past week. He is reported somewhat improved.

Priscilla Johns and youngest son, of Duluth, Minn., are visiting her father, J. I. Champion. G. G. Johns her husband is with his people in Fort Wayne. They talk again of making their home in that city.

Alvira, wife of James Campbell, living three miles east of Butler, is quite seriously ill with erysipelas.

—J. A. Campbell visited Ashley, Hupson and Helmer last week on business.

No movement appears to be made toward holiday exercises by the different churches.

Mrs. Edward Gengnagel is somewhat improved, but is still staying at Mr. G's. father.

The Butler Co. is increasing its force materialy and putting in ten hours a day.

The canning Co. has had a very successful year, and is contracting a very large acreage of tomatoes, corn and cabbage for next yerr.

John Mack's youngest son has bought the Chambers property on Depot-st. There is still a considerable number of houses and lots changing hands at an advance over a year ago.

M. E. Krontz is seriously sick at his home on south Broadway.

A Mr. Clark formerly of Fremont, Mich., is seriously sick, at the McNabb Hotel. He is being cared for by the Odd Fellows.

FARM FOR SALE.

A farm of 60 acres of well improved land, southeast. of Hicksville,—50 acres under cultivation. Good water and young orchard; good frame house and barn. Consideration 2,500 easy payments. For further information inquire at this office.

MERCHANT OF VENICE.

This great play, one of the finest of Shakespeare's great dramas, will be given at the Opera House on Friday evening of this week, Dec. 10, by a strong company that has been giving it successfully all over the country. They carry special scenery for it, and it will give all our people the unusual chance to see a real Shakspeare drama produced on the stage. Remember the date.

La Grippe Cured

This modern malady has become dreaded not more for its direct fatality than for the weakness of body and mind it leaves behind it. Prolonged debility, permanent prostration, melancholy and suicide follow La Grippe. For this disease there is no remedy superior to Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"The best remedy for la grippe that I know of is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."
REV. JOHN K. CHASE,
South Hampton, N. H.

"My wife and five children were taken down with la grippe, while the disease was so widely prevalent. I dosed them with Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before using quite two bottles my family was restored to health. I know of several obstinate cases of the same complaint which were also cured by this remedy." J. PARMINTER, Paulette, Miss.

"I was cured of la grippe by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral."

A GREAT DEAL

of unecessary expenditure of time and money may be saved if you will only keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in the house. Nine tenths of all ordinary sickness is from the stomach; keep that organ in proper condition and all will be well. Syrup Pepsin is a specific. Trial size bottles 10c, large sizes 50c and $1.00, at Davenport,s drugstore.

—There was nice music over Western phone last night. It was the mandolin and piano music at M. B. Willis. Eighteen different phones were connected, and that many different people listened to the music.

FOR AUBURN.

New Band Organization, Incorporated Under the Laws of the State.

A new band has been organized here to be known as the "Auburn Band." It will be regularly incorporated under the laws of the state. The capital stock is put at $2,500, divided into shares, and these will be subscribed by all citizens who feel disposed to assist and encourage this new effort. We hope our people will give them loyal assistance for the band will be the leading one in the state, with not less than 25 or 30 pieces, and a strong corporation. The directors are Dr. Buchtel, D. A. Garwood, W. B. Brown, W. C. Hartman and Will Schaab, names that are a guarantee of success.

DEGREE OF HONOR OFFICERS

The following persons were chosen officers of the Degree of Honor lodge last night

Past Chief, Dorthy Bolton
Chief of Honor, Myrtle Jones
Lady of Honor, Belle Cochran
Chief of Ceremonies, Maude Jolliff
Recorder, Bessie Wise
Financier, Malissa Miller
Receiver, Nettie Love

Organist Lottie Bolender
Medical Examiner, Dr. Hines
Representative to the Grand Lodge, Nettie Love Alternate Sophia Hebel.

REGULAR PASTOR.

Lev. E. P. Hoyt, the new minister at the Baptist church, is now regularly engaged as pastor and will hereafter hold regular services on Sundays, both morning and evening, beginning the coming ..Sunday, Dec. 12. He comes here well recommended, being a man of ability, and a graduate of an eastern institution. He moves here and will occupy the dwelling just west of the church, recently vacated by Roy Garrett. We trust our people will extend the hand of welcome to them in this, their new home.

RIGHT IN IT.

That's where Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is. The greatest remedy for the stomach that was ever put together. Absolutely vegetable with the exception of the Pepsin. Are you constipated? Then try Syrup Pepsin. Have you indigestion or sick headache? Then use Syrup Pepsin. Spend 10c. for a trial bottle and you will be convinced. Large sizes 50c and $1.00. A true family remedy. At F. E. Davenport's.

THE BAPTIST MEETING

Elder Blanchard speaks tonight, and there will be special music by C. S. Harper and daughter, of Orland. Among the pastors present and taking part, are from Wolcottville. Mr. Blanchard and the pastor of tha church, Mr. Bowles; Rev. G. Huffman, who represents the State S. S. work; Rev. Dickinson of Kendallville, Rev, Roberts of Pleasant Lake and others.

APPENDICITIS.

No Medical Cure, Although Some People Recover.

The position is taken by Dr. McBurney, in the London Medical News, that there is really no medical cure for appendicitis, even though some cases recover without operation. He considers, too, though appendicitis is a surgical disease, yet operation may not be necessary in every case, the fact being that this ailment is a stoppage of the drainage from the appendix to the colon, and preliminary treatment is often worse than useless. Thus, the opium treatment relieves pain and discomfort, but entirely masks the symptoms at a most important time, for it is in the first twenty-four hours from the beginning of the attack that physicians can decide not only as to the diagnosis, but as to the result and cause, probably, of the case. If, for instance, there is no increase in urgency in five or six hours, the patient is not in immediate danger if kept at perfect rest in bed; on the other hand, if in twelve hours there is still no increase in the severity of the symptoms, the patient should begin to improve. But if the urgency of the case has steadily increased in twelve hours from the time when the diagnosis was made, an operation will probably be called for. After two attacks a patient is sure to have a third, and each attack renders operation more difficult and dangerous; all the advantages lie in the operation between the attacks, and in an operation during an acute attack the prognosis is worse.

Capital in Bicycle Tires.

The amount of capital invested in the manufacture of bicycle tires in the United States is estimated by an exchange at $3,000,000, the number of persons employed at 3,000 and the number of tires produced annually at 4,000,000.—San Francisco Chronicle.

At the meeting last night the bills of Recorder Jones, The Auburn Foundry, and Ora Brandon were laid over for further investigation.

John Baxter appeared before the board and objected to the hitching posts along the east side of Snell's grocery. He claims it a nuisance to have teams hitched in front of his residence, and office. No action was taken by the board to have them removed.

Marshal was instructed to see that on Ninth street between Main and Jackson was kept in proper condition, and to notify the Kistlinger Co. to put the sidewalk up to the grade. They could then load buggies without driving on and blockading the sidewalk.

Terms of sale of the Indiana Road Machine were read. The board thinks this not the proper time to talk road machines.

Mr. Strane of the firm of Milo & Strane, of Xenia, O., present and read a written proposition to put down a test well for waterworks. The matter was given no consideration but will be brought up later.

Mr. McCibben, a civil engineer of almost a national reputation was present and was an applicant for the job of drawing up plans, etc, but soon learned that Mr. VanAuken had been given the position. He gave the board some good sound information as to the construction of a plant and answered any and all questions they asked him. He seems to be a man of more than ordinary ability in this line, and we believe every member of the council is the wiser after hearing his suggestions.

The location of the Waterworks plant was discussed some. The probabilities are that it will be located on one or the other pieces of property owned by the town.

Upon motion of Dr. Hines the board adjourned till Tuesday night, Dec. 14, when a definite location will be decided on and bids received for putting down test wells.

—The editor of the Dispatch was given a surprise yesterday, it being his birthday. His wife had prepared a nice dinner and invited the force down to dine with him.

—No sensible, says an exchange, right thinking person will contend that small boys and girls should be privileged to run the streets at late hours in the night. A large number of juveniles, hundreds of them in fact have such privilege absolutely unrestricted in Fort Wayne. Their parents are in some instances only careless, but in the cases of a great many, the parents, indifferent to the kind of morals their youngsters cultivate, would rather have them on the streets than to be "bothered" with them at home. This is wrong. It is detrimental to society, it should not be permitted.

—The Dingley tariff law that republican papers are boasting about, has proved a flat failure as far as revenue is concerned The U. S. treasury December statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business November 30, 1897, the public debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,009,226,466 a decrease since October 30, of $11,338,125. This decrease is accounted for by an increase in the cash due to the deposit of an installment of the proceeds of the sale of the government's interest in the Union Pacific which was about fifty millions. But for this transaction the cash in the treasury would have been $771,450 less than last month.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S MESSAGE.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 6.—President McKinley sent the following message to congress to-day:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: It gives me pleasure to extend greeting to the Fifty-fifth congress assembled at the seat of government with many of whose senators and representatives I have been associated in the legislative service. Their meeting occurs under felicitous conditions, justifying sincere congratulation and calling for our grateful acknowledgement to a beneficent Providence which has so signally blessed and prospered us as a nation. Peace and good will with all the nations of the earth continue unbroken.

A matter of genuine satisfaction is the growing feeling of fraternal regard and unification of all sections of our country, the incompleteness of which has too long delayed realization of the highest blessings of the Union. The spirit of patriotism is universal and is ever increasing in fervor. The public questions which now most engross us are lifted far above either partisanship, prejudice or former sectional differences. They affect every part of our common country alike and permit of no division on ancient lines. Questions of foreign policy, of revenue, the soundness of the currency, the inviolability of national obligations, the improvement of the public service, appeal to the individual conscience of every earnest citizen to whatever party he belongs or in whatever section of the country he may reside.

The extra session of this congress which closed during July last enacted important legislation and while its full effect has not yet been realized, what it has already accomplished assures us of its timeliness and wisdom. To test its permanent value further time will be required, and the people, satisfied with its operation and results thus far, are in no mind to withhold from it a fair trial.

Tariff legislation having been settled by the extra session of Congress the question next pressing for consideration is that of the currency.

THE CURRENCY QUESTION.

President Reviews Existing Conditions—Recommendations.

The work of putting our finances upon a sound basis, difficult as it may seem, will appear easier when we recall the financial operations of the government since 1866. On the 30th day of June of that year we had outstanding demand liabilities in the sum of $728,863,447.41. On the first of January, 1897, these liabilities had been reduced to $443,889,495.88. Of our interest-bearing obligations, the figures are even more striking. On July 1, 1866, the principal of the interest-bearing debt of the government was $2,322,331,208. On the first day of July, 1893, this sum had been reduced to $585,037,100, or an aggregate reduction of $1,747,294,108. The interest-bearing debt of the United States on the 1st day of December, 1897, was $347,365,620. The government money now outstanding (Dec. 1) consists of $346,681,016 of United States notes, $107,798,280 of treasury notes issued by authority of the law of 1890, $384,963,503 of silver certificates and $61,230,761 of standard silver dollars.

With the great resources of the government and with the honorable example of the past before us, we ought not to hesitate to enter upon a currency revision which will make our demand obligations less onerous to the government and relieve our financial laws from ambiguity and doubt.

The brief review of what was accomplished from the close of the war to 1893 makes unreasonable and groundless any distrust either of our financial ability or soundness, while the situation from 1893 to 1897 must admonish congress of the immediate necessity of so legislating as to make the return of the conditions then prevailing impossible.

Every Dollar Is Good.

There are many plans proposed as a remedy for the evil. Before we can find the true remedy we must appreciate the real evil. It is not that our currency of every kind is not good, for every dollar of it is good—good because the government's pledge is out to keep it so, and that pledge will not be broken. However, the guaranty of our purpose to keep the pledge will be best shown by advancing toward its fulfillment.

The evil of the present system is found in the great cost of the government of maintaining the parity of our different forms of money; that is, keeping all of them at par with gold. We surely cannot be longer heedless of the burden this imposes upon the people even under fairly prosperous conditions, while the past four years have demonstrated that it is not only an expensive charge upon the government, but a dangerous menace to the national credit.

It is manifest that we must devise some plan to protect the government against bond issues for repeated redemptions. We must either curtail the opportunity for speculation, made easy by the multiplied redemptions of our demand obligations, or increase the gold reserve for their redemption. We have $900,000,000 of currency which the government by solemn enactment has undertaken to keep at par with gold. Nobody is obliged to redeem in gold but the government. The banks are not required to redeem in gold. The government is obliged to keep equal with gold all its outstanding currency and coin obligations, while its receipts are not required to be paid in gold. They are paid in every kind of money but gold, and the only means by which the government can with certainty get gold is by borrowing. It can get it in no other way when it most needs it. The government without any fixed gold revenue is pledged to maintain gold redemption, which it has steadily and faithfully done and which under the authority now given it will continue to do.

The law which requires the government, after having redeemed its United States notes, to pay them out again as current funds demands a constant replenishment of the gold reserve. This is especially so in times of business panic and when the revenues are insufficient to meet the expenses of the government.

At such times the government has no other way to supply its deficit and maintain redemption but through the increase of its bonds, as during the administration of my predecessor, when $262,315,400 of 4½ per cent. bonds were issued and sold and the proceeds used to pay the expenses of the government in excess of the revenues and sustain the gold reserve. While it is true that the greater part of the proceeds of these bonds were used to supply deficient revenues, a considerable portion was required to maintain the gold reserve.

The Need of Reform.

With our revenues equal to our expenses, there would be no deficit requiring the issuance of bonds. But if the gold reserve falls below $100,000,000, how will it be replenished except by selling more bonds? Is there any other way practicable under existing laws? The serious question then is, shall we continue the policy that has been pursued in the past; that is when the gold reserve reaches the point of danger, issue more bonds and supply the needed gold, or shall we provide other means to prevent these recurring drains upon the gold reserve? If no further legislation is had and the policy of selling bonds is to be continued then congress should give the secretary of the treasury authority to sell bonds at long or short periods, bearing a less rate of interest than is now authorized by law.

I earnestly recommend, as soon as the receipts of the government are quite sufficient to pay all the expenses of the government, that when any of the United States notes are presented for redemption in gold and are redeemed in gold such notes shall be kept and set apart, and only paid out in exchange for gold. This is an obvious duty. If the holder of the United States note prefers the gold and gets it from the government he should not receive back from the government a United States note without paying gold in exchange for it. The reason for this is made all the more apparent when the government issues an interest-bearing debt to provide gold for the redemption of United States notes—a non-interest-bearing debt. Surely it should not pay them out again except on demand for gold. If they are put out in any other way they may return again to be followed by another bond issue to redeem them—another interest-bearing debt to redeem a non-interest-bearing debt.

To Relieve the Government.

In my view it is of the utmost importance that the government should be relieved from the burden of providing all the gold required for exchanges and export. This responsibility is alone borne by the government without any of the usual and necessary banking powers to help itself. The banks do not feel the strain of gold redemption. The whole strain rests upon the government, and the size of the gold reserve in the treasury has come to be, with or without reason, the signal of danger or of security. This ought to be stopped.

If we are to have an era of prosperity in the country, with sufficient receipts for the expenses of the government, we may feel no immediate embarrassment from our present currency; but the danger still exists and will be ever present, menacing us so long as the existing system continues. And besides, it is in times of adequate revenues and business tranquility that the government should prepare for the worst. We cannot avoid without serious consequences the wise consideration and prompt solution of this question.

The secretary of the treasury has outlined a plan in great detail for the purpose of removing the threatened recurrence of a depleted gold reserve and save us from future embarrassment on that account. To this plan I invite your careful consideration.

I concur with the secretary of the treasury in his recommendation that national banks be allowed to issue notes to the face value of the bonds which they have deposited for circulation, and that the tax on circulating notes secured by deposit of such bonds be reduced to one-half of 1 per cent. per annum. I also join him in recommending that authority be given for the establishment of national banks with a minimum capital of $25,000. This will enable the smaller villages and agricultural regions of the country to be supplied with currency to meet their needs.

I recommend that the issue of national bank notes be restricted to the denomination of $10 and upwards. If the suggestions I have herein made shall have the approval of congress then I would recommend that national banks be required to redeem the notes in gold.

THE CUBAN QUESTION.

Island Must Not Pass Into the Hands of Another Power.

The most important problem with which this government is now called upon to deal pertaining to its foreign relations concerns its duty toward Spain and the Cuban insurrection. Problems and conditions more or less in common with those now existing have confronted this government at various times in the past. The story of Cuba for many years has been one of unrest, growing discontent, an effort toward a larger enjoyment of liberty and self control, of organized resistance to the mother country, of depression after distress and warfare and of ineffectual settlement to be followed by renewed revolt. For no enduring period since the enfranchisement of the continental possessions of Spain in the Western continent has the condition of Cuba or the policy of Spain toward Cuba not caused concern to the United States.

The prospect from time to time that the weakness of Spain's hold upon the island and the political vicissitudes and embarrassments of the home government might lead to the transfer of Cuba to a continental power called forth, between 1823 and 1860, various emphatic declarations of the policy of the United States to permit no disturbance of Cuba's connection with Spain unless in the direction of independence or acquisition by us through purchase; nor has there been any change of this declared policy since upon the part of the government.

The revolution which began in 1868 lasted for ten years, despite the strenuous efforts of the successive peninsular governments to suppress it. Then, as now, the government of the United States testified its grave concern and offered its aid to put an end to bloodshed in Cuba. The overtures made by Gen. Grant were refused and the war dragged on, entailing great loss of life and treasure and increased injury to American interests, besides throwing enhanced burdens of neutrality on the government. In 1878 peace was brought about by the truce of Zanjon, obtained by negotiations between the Spanish commander, Martinez de Campos, and the insurgent leaders.

Code of War Disregarded.

The present insurrection broke out in February, 1895. It is not my purpose at this time to recall its remarkable increase or to characterize its tenacious resistance against the enormous forces massed against it by Spain. The revolt and the efforts to subdue it carried destruction to every quarter of the island, developing wide proportions and defying the efforts of Spain for its suppression. The civilized code of war has been disregarded, no less so by the Spaniards than by the Cubans.

The existing conditions cannot but fill this government and the American people with the gravest apprehension. There is no desire on the part of our people to profit by the misfortunes of Spain. We have only the desire to see the Cubans prosperous and contented, enjoying that measure of self-control which is the inalienable right of man, protected in their right to reap the benefit of exhaustless treasures of their country.

The offer made by my predecessor in April, 1896, tendering the friendly offices of this government, failed. Any mediation on our part was not accepted. In brief the answer read:

"There is no effectual way to pacify Cuba unless it begins with the actual submission of the rebels to the mother country."

Then, only, could Spain act in the promised direction of her own motion and after her own plans.

The cruel policy of concentration was initiated Feb. 16, 1896. The prospective districts controlled by the Spanish armies were depopulated. The agricultural inhabitants were herded in and about the garrison towns, their lands laid waste and their dwellings destroyed. This policy the late cabinet of Spain justified as a necessary measure of war and as a means of cutting off supplies from the insurgents. It has utterly failed as a war measure. It was not civilized warfare. It was extermination.

Against this abuse of the rights of war I have felt constrained on repeated occasions to enter the firm and earnest protest of this government. There was much of public condemnation of the treatment of American citizens by alleged illegal arrests and long imprisonment awaiting trial or pending protracted judicial proceedings. I felt it my first duty to make instant demand for the release or speedy trial of all American citizens under arrest. Before the change of the Spanish cabinet, in October last, twenty-two prisoners, citizens of the United States had been given their freedom.

For the relief of our own citizens, suffering because of the conflict, the aid of congress was sought in a special message, and under the appropriation of April 4, 1897, effective aid has been given to American citizens in Cuba, many of them at their own request having been returned to the United States.

Instructions to Woodford.

The instructions given to our new minister to Spain before his departure for his post directed him to impress upon that government the sincere wish of the United States to lend its aid toward the ending of the war in Cuba by reaching a peaceful and lasting result, just and honorable alike to Spain and to the Cuban people. These instructions recited the character and duration of the contest, the widespread losses it entails, the burdens and restraints it imposes upon us, with constant disturbance of national interests and the injury resulting from an indefinite continuance of this state of things. It was stated that at this juncture our government was constrained to seriously inquire if the time was not ripe when Spain, of her own volition, moved by her own interests and every sentiment of humanity, should put a stop to this destructive war and make proposals of settlement honorable to herself and just to her Cuban colony. It was urged that, as a neighboring nation with large interests in Cuba, we could be required to wait only a reasonable time for the mother country to establish its authority and restore order within the borders of the island; that we could not contemplate an indefinite period for the accomplishment of this result.

No solution was proposed to which the slightest idea of humiliation to Spain could attach, and, indeed, precise proposals were withheld to avoid embarrassment to that government. All that was asked or expected was that some safe way might be speedily provided and permanent peace restored. It so chanced that the consideration of this offer, addressed to the same Spanish administration which had declined the tenders of my predecessor, and which for more than two years had poured men and treasure into Cuba in the fruitless effort to suppress the revolt, fell to others. Between the departure of Gen. Woodford, the new envoy, and his arrival in Spain, the statesman who had shaped the policy of his country fell by the hand of an assassin, and although the cabinet of the late premier still held office and received from our envoy the proposals he bore, that cabinet gave place within a few days thereafter to a new administration under the leadership of Sagasta.

The reply to our note was received on the 23d day of October. It is in the direction of a better understanding. It appreciates the friendly purposes of this government. It admits that our country is deeply affected by the war in Cuba and that its desires for peace are just. It declares that the present Spanish government is bound by every consideration to a change of policy that should satisfy the United States and pacify Cuba within a reasonable time.

To this end Spain has decided to put into effect the political reforms heretofore advocated by the present premier, without halting for any consideration in the path which in its judgment leads to peace. The military operations, it is said, will continue, but will be humane and conducted with all regard for private rights, being accompanied by political action leading to the autonomy of Cuba while guarding Spanish sovereignty.

This, it is claimed, will result in investing Cuba with a distinct personality; the island will be governed by an executive and by a local council or chamber, reserving to Spain the control of the foreign relations, the army and navy and the judicial administration. To accomplish this the present government proposes to modify existing legislation by decree, leaving the Spanish cortes with the aid of Cuban senators and deputies, to solve the economic problem and properly distribute the existing debt.

In the absence of a declaration of the measures that this government proposes to take in carrying out its proffer of good offices it suggests that Spain be left free to conduct military operations and grant political reforms, while the United States for its part shall enforce its neutral obligations and cut off the assistance, which, it is asserted, the insurgents receive from this country.

The supposition of an indefinite prolongation of the war is denied. It is asserted that the Western provinces are already well nigh reclaimed; that the planting of cane and tobacco therein has been resumed and that by force of arms and new and ample reforms very early and complete pacification is hoped for.

Spain Promises Amelioration.

The immediate amelioration of existing conditions under the new administration of Cuban affairs is predicted, and therewith all the disturbance and all occasion for any change of attitude on the part of the United States is obviated.

Discussion of the question of the international duties and responsibilities of the United States, as Spain understands them, are presented, with an apparent disposition to charge us with failure in this regard. The charge is without any basis in fact. It could not have been made if Spain had been cognizant of the constant efforts this government has made at the cost of millions and by the employment of the administrative machinery of the nation at command to perform its full duty according to the law of nations. That it has successfully prevented the departure of a single military expedition or armed vessel from our shores in violation of our laws would seem to be a sufficient answer. But of this aspect of the Spanish note it is not necessary to speak further now. Firm in the conviction of a wholly performed obligation, due response to this charge has been made in diplomatic course.

Throughout all these horrors and dangers to our own peace this government has never broken nor even in any way abrogated its sovereign prerogative of reserving to itself the determination of its policy and course according to its own high sense of right and in consonance with the dearest interests and convictions of our own people should the prolongation of the war so demand.

Of the untried measures there remain only: Recognition of the insurgents as belligerents; recognition of the independence of Cuba; neutral intervention to end the war by imposing a rational compromise between the contestants, and intervention in favor of one or the other party. I speak not of forcible annexation, for that cannot be thought of. That by our code of morality would be criminal aggression.

Recognition of the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents has often been canvassed—a possible if not inevitable step, both in regard to the previous ten years' struggle and during the present war. I am not unmindful that the two houses of Congress, in the spring of 1896, expressed the opinion by concurrent resolution that a condition of public war existed requiring or justifying recognition of the state of belligerency in Cuba, and during the extra session the Senate voted a joint resolution of like import, which, however, was not brought to a vote in the House of Representatives.

In the presence of these significant expressions of the sentiment of the legislatives branch it behooves the executive to soberly consider the conditions under which so important a measures must needs rest for justification. It is to be seriously considered whether the Cuban insurrection possesses beyond dispute the attributes of statehood which alone can demand the recognition of belligerency in its favor. Possession, in short, of the essential qualifications of sovereignty by the insurgents, and the conduct of the war by them according to the recognized code of war are no less important factors toward the determination of the problem of belligerency than are the influences and consequences of the struggle upon the internal policy of the recognizing state.

The utterances of President Grant in his memorable message on December 7, 1875, are signally relevant to the present situation in Cuba, and it may be wholesome now to recall them. At that time a ruinous conflict had for seven years wasted the neighboring island. During all those years an utter disregard of the laws of civilized warfare and of the just demands of humanity, which called forth expressions of condemnation from the nations of Christendom, continued unabated. Desolation and ruin pervaded that productive region, enormously affecting the commerce of all commercial nations, but that of the United States more than any other by reason of proximity and larger trade and intercourse. At that juncture Grant uttered these words which now as then sum up the elements of the problem:

Recognition Is Impracticable.

"A recognition of the independence of Cuba being, in my opinion, impracticable and indefensible, the question which next presents itself is that of the recognition of belligerent rights in the parties to the contest. In a former message to congress I had occasion to consider this question, and reached the conclusion that the conflict in Cuba, dreadful and devastating as were its incidents, did not rise to the fearful dignity of war. It is possible that the acts of foreign powers, and even acts of Spain herself of this very nature might be pointed to in defense of such recognition. But now, as in its past history, the United States should carefully avoid the false lights which might lead it into the mazes of doubtful law and of questionable propriety, and adhere rigidly and sternly to the rule which has been its guide, of doing only that which is right and honest and of good report. The question of according or of withholding rights of belligerency must be judged in every case, in view of the particular attending facts.

"Unless justified by necessity, it is always, and justly, regarded as an unfriendly act and a gratuitous demonstration of moral support to the rebellion. It is necessary, and it is required, when the interests and rights of another government or of its people are so far affected by a pending civil conflict as to require a definition of its relations to the parties thereto. But this conflict must be one which is recognized in the sense or international law as war.

"Belligerence, too, is a fact. The mere existence of contending armed bodies and their occasional conflicts do not constitute war in the sense referred to. Applying to the existing condition of affairs in Cuba the tests recognized by publicists and writers on international law, and which have been observed by nations of dignity, honesty and power when free from sensitive or selfish and unworthy motives, I fail to find in the insurrection the existence of such a substantial political organization, real, palpable and manifest to the world, having the forms and capable of the ordinary functions of government towards its own people and to other states with courts for the administration of justice with a local habitation, possessing such organization of force, such material, such occupation of territory as to take the contest out of the category of a mere rebellious insurrection or occasional skirmishes and place it on the terrible footing of war, to which a recognition of belligerency would aim to elevate it.

"The contest, moreover, is solely on land; the insurrection has not possessed itself of a single seaport whence it may send forth its flag, nor has it any means of communication with foreign powers except through the military lines of its adversaries. No apprehension of any of those sudden and difficult complications which a war upon the ocean is apt to precipitate upon the vessels, both commercial and national and upon the consular officers of other powers, calls for the definition of the relations to the parties to the contest. Considered as a question of expediency, I regard the accordance of belligerent rights still to be as unwise and premature, as I regard it to be, at present, indefensible as a measure of right.

"Such recognition entails upon the country, according the rights which flow from it, difficult and complicated duties and requires the exaction from the contending parties of the strict observance of their rights and obligations. It confers the right of search upon the high seas by vessels of both parties; it would subject the carrying of arms and munitions of war, which now may be transported freely and without interruption in vessels of the United States, to detention and to possible seizure; it would give rise to countless vexatious questions, would release the parent government from responsibility for acts done by the insurgents and would invest Spain with the right to exercise the supervision recognized by our treaty of 1795 over our commerce on the seas, a very large part of which, in its traffic between the Atlantic and the Gulf states and between all of them and the states on the Pacific, passes through the waters which wash the shores of Cuba. The exercise of this supervision could scarce fail to lead, if not to abuses, certainly to collisions perilous to the peaceful relations of the two states.

There can be little doubt as to what result such supervision would before long draw this nation. It would be unworthy of the United States to inaugurate the possibilities of such result, by measures of questionable right or expediency, or by any indirection.

More Humane Methods in Cuba.

The first acts of the new government lie in these honorable paths. The policy of cruel rapine and extermination that so long shocked the universal sentiment of humanity has been reversed. Under the new military commander a broad clemency is preferred. Measures have already been set on foot to relieve the horrors of starvation. The power of the Spanish armies, it is asserted, is to be used not to spread ruin and desolation, but to protect the resumption of peaceful agricultural pursuits and productive industries. That past methods are futile to force a peace by subjugation is freely admitted and ruin without conciliation must inevitably fail to win for Spain the fidelity of a cotented dependency.

Decrees in application of the foreshadowed reforms have already been promulgated. The full text of these decrees has not been received, but as furnished in a telegraphic summary from our minister are:

"All civil and electoral rights of peninsular Spaniards, are, in virtue of existing constitutional authority, forthwith extended to colonial Spaniards. A scheme of autonomy has been proclaimed by decree, to become effective upon ratification by the Cortes. It creates a Cuban Parliament which, with the insular executive can consider and vote upon all subjects affecting local order and interests, possessing unlimited powers save as to matters of state, war and the navy, as to which the governor-general acts by his own authority as the delegate of the central government. This parliament requires the oath of the governor-general to preserve faithfully the liberties and privileges of the colony, and to it the colonial secretaries are responsible. It has the right to propose to the central government, through the governor-general modifications of the national charter and to invite new projects of law or executive measures in the interest of the colony. Besides its local powers, it is competent, first, to regulate electoral registration and procedure and prescribe the qualifications of electors and the manner of exercising suffrage; second, to organize courts of justice with native judges from members of the local bar; third to frame the insular budget, both as to expenditures and revenues, without limitation of any kind and to set apart the revenues to meet the Cuban share of the national budget, which latter will be voted by the national Cortes with the assistance of the Cuban senators and deputies; fourth, to initiate or take part in the negotiations of the national government for commercial treaties which may affect Cuban interests; fifth, to accept or reject commercial treaties which the national government may have concluded without the participation of the Cuban government; sixth, to frame the colonial tariff, acting in accord with the peninsular government in scheduling articles of mutual commerce between the mother country and the colonies. Before introducing or voting upon a bill, the Cuban government or the chambers will lay the project before the central government and hear its opinion thereon, all the correspondence in such regard being made public. Finally, all conflicts of jurisdiction arising between the different municipal, provincial and insular assemblies, or between the latter and the insular executive power, and which from their nature may not be referable to the central government for decision, shall be submitted to the courts.

Confidence in Spain's Sincerity.

That the government of Sagasta has entered upon a course from which recession with honor is impossible can hardly be questioned; that in the few weeks it has existed it has made earnest of the sincerity of its professions is undeniable. I shall not impugn its sincerity, nor should impatience be suffered to embarrass it in the task it has undertaken. It is honestly due to Spain, and to our friendly relations with Spain, that she should be given a reasonable chance to realize her expectations and to prove the asserted efficacy of the new order of things to which she stands irrevocably committed. She has recalled the commander whose brutal orders inflamed the American mind and shocked the civilized world. She has modified the horrible order of concentration and has undertaken to care for the helpless and permit those who desire to resume the cultivation of their fields to do so, and assures them of the protection of the Spanish government in their lawful occupations. She has just released the Competitor prisoners, heretofore sentenced to death, and who have been the subject of repeated diplomatic correspondence during both this and the preceding administration.

Not a single American citizen is now in arrest or confinement in Cuba, of whom this government has any knowledge. The near future will demonstrate whether the indispensable condition of a righteous peace, just alike to the Cuban and Spain, as well as equitable to all our interests so intimately involved in the welfare of Cuba, is likely to be attained. If not, the exigency of further and other action by the United States will remain to be taken. When that time comes that action will be determined in the time of indisputable right and duty. It will be faced, without misgiving or hesitancy, in the light of the obligation this government owes to itself, to the people who have confided to it the protection of their interests and honor and to humanity.

Sure of the right, keeping free from all offense ourselves, actuated only by upright and patriotic considerations, moved neither by passion nor selfishness, the government will continue its watchful care over the rights and property of American citizens and will abate none of its efforts to bring about by peaceful agencies a peace which shall be honorable and enduring. If it shall hereafter appear to be a duty imposed by our obligations to ourselves, to civilization and humanity to intervene with force, it shall be without fault on our part and only because the necessity for such action will be so clear as to command the support and approval of the civilized world.

HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION.

The Senate Urged to Approve of the Treaty.

By a special message dated the 16th day of June last, I laid before the senate a treaty signed that day by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and of the republic of Hawaii, having for its purpose the incorporation of the Hawaiian islands as an integral part of the United States and under its sovereignty. The senate having removed the injunction of secrecy, although the treaty is still pending before that body, the subject may be properly referred to in this message because the necessary action of congress is required to determine by legislation many details of the eventual union should the fact of annexation be accomplished as I believe it should be.

While consistently disavowing from a very early period any aggressive policy of absorption in regard to the Hawaiian group, a long series of declarations through three-quarters of a century has proclaimed the vital interest of the United States in the independent life of the islands and their intimate commercial dependence upon this country. At the same time it has been repeatedly asserted that in no event could the entity of Hawaiian statehood cease by the passage of the islands under the denomination or influence of another power than the United States. Under these circumstances the logic of events required that annexation, heretofore offered but declined, should in the ripeness of time come about as the natural result of the strengthening ties that bind us to those islands and be realized by the free will of the Hawaiian state.

Ratified by Hawaii.

That treaty was unanimously ratified without amendment by the Senate and President of the republic of Hawaii on the 10th of September last and only awaits the favorable action of the American senate to effect the complete absorption of the islands into the domain of the United States. What the conditions of such a union shall be, the political relation thereof to the United States, character of the local administration, the quality and degree of the elective franchise of the inhabitants, the extension of the federal laws to the territory, or the enactment of special laws to fit the peculiar condition thereof, the regulation if need be, of the labor system therein, are all matters which the treaty has wisely relegated to Congress.

If the treaty is confirmed, as every consideration of dignity and honor requires, the wisdom of Congress will see to it, that, avoiding abrupt assimilation of events perhaps hardly yet fitted to share in the highest franchises of citizenship, and having due regard to the geographical conditions, the most just provisions for self rule in local matters with the largest political liberties as an integral part of our nation will be accorded to the Hawaiians.

No less is due to a people, who, after nearly five years of demonstrated capacity to fulfil the obligations of self governing statehood, come of their own free will to merge their destinies in our body politic.

Hawaii and Japan.

The questions which have arisen between Japan and Hawaii, by reason of the treatment of Japanese laborers emigrating to the islands under the Hawaiian-Japanese convention of 1888, are in a satisfactory stage of settlement by negotiation. This government has not been invited to mediate, and on the other hand has sought no intervention in that matter further than to evince its kindliest disposition towards such a speedy and direct adjustment by the two sovereign states in interests as shall comport with equity and honor.

It is gratifying to learn that the apprehensions at first displayed on the past of Japan, lest the cessation of Hawaii's national life through annexation might impair privileges to which Japan honorably laid claim, have given place to confidence in the uprightness of this government and in the sincerity of its purpose to deal with all possible ulterior questions in the broadest spirit of friendliness.

CAUSE OF BIMETALLISM.

Still Room for Hope of an International Agreement.

Under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1897 for the promotion of an international agreement respecting bimetalism, I appointed on the 14th day of April 1897 Edward O. Wolcott of Colorado, Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois and Charles J. Paine of Massachusetts as special envoys to represent the United States. They have been diligent in their efforts to secure the co-operation of European countries in the international settlement of the question, but up to this time have not been able to secure the agreement contemplated by their mission.

The gratifying action of our great sister republic of France in joining this country in the attempt to bring about an agreement among the principal commercial nations of Europe, whereby a fixed and relative value between gold and silver shall be secured, furnishes assurance that we are not alone among the larger nations of the world in realizing the international character of the problem and in the desire of reaching some wise and practical solution of it. The British government has published a resume of the steps taken jointly by the French ambassador in London and the special envoys of the United States, with whom our ambassador at London actively co-operates in the presentation of this subject to her majesty's government. This will be laid before Congress.

Our special envoys have not made their final report, as further negotiations between the representatives of this government and the governments of other countries are pending, and in contemplation. They believe that doubts which have been raised in certain quarters respecting the position of maintaining the stability of the parity between the metals and kindred questions may yet be solved by further negotiations.

Meanwhile, it gives me satisfaction to state that the special envoys have already demonstrated their ability and fitness to deal with the subject, and it is to be earnestly hoped that their labors may result in an international agreement which will bring about recognition of both gold and silver as money upon such terms and with such safe-guards as will secure the use of both metals upon a basis which shall work no injustice to any class of our citizens.

PAN-AMERICAN RELATIONS.

Difficulty Encountered by a Minister to the Greater Republic.

As to the representation of this government to Nicaragua, Salvador and Costa Rica, I have concluded that William L. Merry, confirmed as minister to the states of Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Salvador from the United States shall proceed to San Jose, Costa Rica, and there temporarily establish the headquarters of the United States to those three states. I took this action for what I regarded as the paramount interests of this country. It was developed upon an investigation by the secretary of state that the government of Nicaragua, while not unwilling to receive Mr. Merry in his diplomatic quality, was unable to do so because of the compact concluded June 20, 1895, whereby that republic and those of Salvador and Honduras, forming what is known as the Greater Republic of Central America, had surrendered to the representative diet there of their right to receive and send diplomatic agents. The diet was not willing to accept him because he was not accredited to that body. I could not recredit him to that body because the appropriation law of Congress did not permit it. Mr. Baker, the present minister at Managua, has been directed to present his letters of recall.

W. Godfrey Hunter has likewise been accredited to the governments of Guatemala and Honduras, the same as his predecessor. Guatemala is not a member of the Great Republic of Central America, but Honduras is.

Should this latter government decline to receive him he has been instructed to report this fact to his government and await its further instructions.

RECIPROCITY NEGOTIATIONS.

Negotiations Pending With Foreign Countries.

In order to execute as early as possible the provisions of the third and fourth sections of the revenue act approved July 24, 1897, I appointed John A. Kasson of Iowa a special commissioner plenipotentiary to undertake the requisite negotiations with foreign countries desiring to avail themselves of these provisions. The negotiations are now proceeding with several governments, both European and American. It is believed that by a careful exercise of the powers conferred by that act some grievances of our own and of other countries in our mutual trade relations may be either removed or largely alleviated and that the volume of our commercial exchanges may be enlarged, with advantage to both contracting parties.

Most desirable from every standpoint of national interest and patriotism is the effort to extend our foreign commerce. To this end our merchant marine should be improved and enlarged. We should do our full share of the carrying trade of the world. We do not do it now. We should be the laggard no longer. The inferiority of our merchant marine is justly humiliating to the national pride. The government by every proper constitutional means should aid in making our ships familiar visitors at every commercial port of the world, thus opening up new and valuable markets to the surplus products of the farm and the factory.

The efforts which had been made during the two previous years by my predecessor to secure better protection to the fur seals in the North Pacific ocean and Bering sea, were renewed at an early date by this administration and have been pursued with earnestness.

Upon my invitation the governments of Japan and Russia sent delegates to Washington and an international conference was held during the months of October and November last, wherein it was unanimously agreed that under the existing regulations this species of useful animals was threatened with extinction and that an international agreement of all the interested powers was necessary for their adequate protection. The government of of Great Britain did not see proper to be represented at this conference, but subsequently sent to Washington, as delegates, the expert commissioners of Great Britain and Canada, who had during the past two years visited the Pribylof islands and who met in conference similar commissioners on the part of the United States. The result of this conference was an agreement on important facts connected with the condition of the seal herd, heretofore in dispute, which should place beyond controversy the duty of the governments concerned to adopt measures without delay for the preservation and restoration of the herd. Negotiations to this end are now in progress, the result of which, I hope to be able to report to congress at an early day. International arbitration cannot be omitted from the list of subjects claiming our consideration. Events have only served to strengthen the general views on this question expressed in my inaugural address. The best sentiment of the civilized world is moving toward the settlement of differences between nations without resorting to the horrors of war. Treaties embodying these humane principles on broad lines without in any way imperiling our interests or our honor shall have my constant encouragement.

DUTY TOWARD ALASKA.

Much Must Be Done for That Remote Territory.

A general system of public surveys has not been extended to Alaska and all entries thus far made in that district are upon special surveys. The act of Congress extending to Alaska the mining laws of the United States contained the reservation that it should not be construed to put in force the general land laws of the country.

By the act approved March 3, 1891, authority was given for entry of lands for town site purposes and also for the purchase of not exceeding 160 acres then or thereafter occupied for purposes of trade and manufacture.

The purpose of Congress as thus far expressed has been that only such rights should apply to that territory as should be specifically named.

It will be seen how much remains to be done for the vast and remote and yet promising portion of our country. Special authority was given to the President by the act of Congress approved July 24, 1897, to divide that territory into two land districts and to designate the boundaries thereof and to appoint registers and surveyors of said land offices, and the President was also authorized to appoint a surveyor-general for the entire district.

Pursuant to this authority a surveyor-general and receiver have been appointed with offices at Sitka. If in the ensuing year the conditions justify it, the additional land district authorized by law will be established, with an office at some point in the Yukon valley. No appropriation, however, was made for this purpose and that is now necessary to be done for the two land districts into which the territory is to be divided.

I concur with the secretary of war in his suggestions as to the necessity for a military force in the territory of Alaska for the protection of persons and property. Already a small force, consisting of twenty-five men, with two officers, under command of Lieut.-Col. Randall of the Eighth infantry, has been sent to St. Michael to establish a military post. As it is to the interest of the government to encourage the settlement of the country and its duty to follow up its citizens with the benefit of legal machinery I earnestly urge upon congress the establishment of a system of government with such flexibility as will enable it to adjust itself to the future areas of greatest population.

The startling though possibly exaggerated reports from the Yukon river country of the probable shortage of food for the large number of people who are wintering there without the means of leaving the country are confirmed in such measure as to justify bringing the matter to the attention of congress. Access to that country in winter can be had only by the passes from Dyea and vicinity which is a most difficult and perhaps an impossible task. However, should these reports of the suffering of our fellow citizens be further verified, every effort at any cost should be made to carry them relief.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

A Report of the Commission Is Being Awaited.

A subject of large importance to our country and increasing appreciation on the part of the people is the completion of the great highway between the Atlantic and Pacific, known as the Nicaraguan canal. Its utility and value to American commerce is universally admitted. The commission appointed under date of July 24 last, "to continue the surveys and examinations authorized by the act approved March 2, 1895," in regard to "the proper route, feasibility and cost of construction of the Nicaragua canal, with a view of making complete plans for the entire work of construction of such canal," is now employed in the undertaking. In the future I shall take occasion to transmit to congress the report of this commission, making at the same time such further suggestions as may then seem advisable.

THE NAVY.

Some Additions Which are Thought to Be Needed.

The present immediately effective of the navy consists of four battleships of the first-class, two of the second and forty-eight other vessels, ranging from armored cruisers to torpedo boats.

There are under construction five battleships of the first-class, sixteen torpedo boats and one submarine boat. No provision has yet been made for the armor of three of the five battleships as it has been impossible to obtain it at the price fixed by congress. It is of great importance that congress provide this armor, as until then the ships are of no fighting value. The present naval force, especially in view of its increase by the ships now under construction, while not as large as that of a few other powers is a formidable force; its vessels are the very best of each type; and with the increase that should be made to it from time to time in the future, and careful attention to keeping it in a higher state of efficiency and repair, it is well adapted to the necessities of the country.

The great increase of the navy which has taken place in recent years was justified by the requirements for national defense and received public approbation. The time has now arrived, however, when this increase to which the country is committed should for a time take the form of increased facilities, commensurate with the increase of our naval vessels. It is an unfortunate fact that there is only one dock on the Pacific coast capable of docking our largest ships and only one on the Atlantic coast, and that the latter has for the last six or seven months been under repair and therefore incapable of use. Immediate steps should be taken to provide three or four docks of this capacity in the Atlantic coast at least one in the Pacific coast and a floating dock in the gulf. This is the recommendation of a very competent board, appointed to investigate the subject. There should also be ample provision made for powder and projectiles, and other munitions of war and for an increased number of officers and enlisted men. Some additions are also necessary to our navy yards for the repair and care of our larger number of vessels. As there are now on the docks five battleships of the largest class, which cannot be completed for a year or two I concur with the recommendation of the secretary of the navy for an appropriation authorizing the construction of one battleship for the Pacific coast where at present there is only one in commission and one under construction, while in the Atlantic coast there are three in commission and four under construction; and also that several torpedo boats be authorized in connection with our general system of coast defense.

The territory of Alaska requires the prompt and early attention of congress. The conditions now existing demand material changes in the laws relating to the territory. The great influx of population during the past summer and fall and the prospect of a still larger immigration in the spring will not permit us to longer neglect the extension of civil authority within the territory or postpone the establishment of a more thorough government.

FRENCH EXPOSITION.

Report Relating to the Proposed Display.

The acceptance by this government of the invitation of the Republic of France to participate in the universal exposition of 1900 at Paris was immediately followed by the appointment of a special commission to represent the United States in the proposed exposition, with special reference to the securing of space for an adequate exhibit on behalf of the United States.

The special commissioner delayed his departure for Paris long enough to ascertain the probable demand for space by American exhibitors. His inquiries developed an almost unprecedented interest in the proposed exposition, and the information thus acquired enabled him to justify an application for much larger allotment of space for the American section than had been reserved by the exposition authorities. The result was particularly gratifying in view of the fact that the United States was one of the last countries to accept the invitation of France.

The reception recorded our special commissioner was most cordial and he was given every reasonable assurance that the United States would receive a consideration commensurate with the proportions of our exhibit. The report of the special commissioner as to the magnitude and importance of the coming exposition and the great demand for space by American exhibitors supplies new arguments for a liberal and judicious appropriation by Congress to the end that an exhibit fairly representative of the industries and resources of our country may be made in an exposition which will illustrate the world's progress during the Nineteenth century. That exposition is intended to be the most important and comprehensive of the long series of international exhibitions, of which our own at Chicago was a brilliant example and it is desirable that the United States should make a worthy exhibit of American genius and skill and their unrivalled achievements in every branch of indust

FIRST WOMAN CITIZEN

HER STURDY LADS AND CLEVER LASSES BECOME PROMINENT CITIZENS.

Known as the "Widow Ryan"—Was a Clever Business Woman—Short Sketch of Her Life and What Some of Her Children Accomplished.

From the News, Indianapolis, Ind.

Hundreds of thousands of men of foreign birth have taken out papers declaring their citizenship in Indiana since that State was admitted into the Union in 1816 without creating remark or comment. It was a different matter, however, when along in the forties the first woman of foreign birth applied for and received papers of citizenship.

The "first woman citizen" was an Irish widow who settled in southern Indiana with her progeny of sturdy lads and clever lasses upon a farm which she had bought. She had taken out naturalization papers in order to manage her property to better advantage, and for the further purpose of starting her family as true Americans with a full understanding of the advantages and responsibilities of American citizenship.

"The Widow Ryan," as she was known in Daviess County, Indiana, was a great woman with a clever business head and left behind her those who grew to be worthy men and worthy women, and who have left their impress upon the State.

One of these sons, James B. Ryan, became Treasurer of the State of Indiana, and a son-in-law, M. L. Brett, also held that high and honorable position. Another son was the late Lieut. Col. Richard J. Ryan, who was probably the most brilliant and gifted orator that Indiana ever produced, and who during the war for the Union served his country in the Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, better known as "the Irish Regiment."

Another son is Thomas F. Ryan, who is now 50 years old, and with a few intervals of absence has been a resident of Indianapolis for forty-two years. Mr. Ryan has been an active business man all his life and has seen more than one fortune come and go in the vicissitudes of trade and sudden panic.

In the early fifties, smitten by the gold fever, he went by way of the Isthmus of Panama to California, and he has always retained the free-hearted, open and trusting confidence that distinguished the gallant pioneers of the golden State. He has been engaged in mining and trade operations in Oregon, Arizona and Montana. From May, 1885, until August, 1887, he was the government agent at the Seal Islands off the Alaska coast, a highly responsible position.

"For ten years or more," said Mr. Ryan, in conversation with a group of gentlemen at the Indianapolis Board of Trade, "I have been sensitive in my lower limbs to weather changes. If my legs had been filled with quicksilver I do not think they could have responded more quickly or more disagreeably to climatic conditions.

"During the past two years this infirmity became much worse, and I began to be alarmed, fearing paralysis. My legs were cold and recently from my knees down were without sensation. I could walk only short distances and would even then experience great weariness. I became more and more alarmed. I naturally thought of paralysis or locomotor ataxia. The prospect was not pleasing.

"I happened to meet my old friend Capt. C. F. Shepard, of this city. He was chanting the praises of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and gave me his experience, telling me that he had been brought by using them from a bed where he lay helpless, his physician having declared him a hopeless victim of locomotor ataxia, and was now as active as any man of his age, not even requiring the use of a cane. Upon his recommendation I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"I found positive relief, after taking a few doses. The numbness in my limbs disappeared as if by magic, and I can walk as far as I like at a good rapid gait and without weariness. This you may understand is a great boon to a man who has been of an active habit of life, and who still likes to depend to a great extent upon his legs to get around in the world.

"The pills also drove the rheumatism out of my hip, for I have not been bothered with it since I began their use. I think I shall have to join Captain Shepard in his praises of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. These pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Changed the Bill.

"It was on one of my early trips," said the conductor. "A well-dressed man got on my car, and when I went to him for his fare he handed me a $5 bill. I took the bill and examined it pretty close, as I always do with big bills. I didn't have any too much change, so I held the bill in my hand, and said, 'Haven't you anything smaller?' The man said, 'I don't think so,' but he took the bill and crumped it up in his hand while he searched through his pockets for smaller money. Then he shook his head and handed back the crumpled bill. I didn't look at it again, but stuck it in my pocket, and counted out $4.95 change. Well, when I counted my money at the end of the run I found myself just $4 short. Then I tumbled to the game. The sharper had cleverly changed the fiver for a one while he was looking through his pockets, and I simply bit like a sucker. But, say, you can bet I won't bite again."

The fly crook sooner or later gets winged.

FREAKS OF FORTUNE.

Windfalls That Came to Some People Unexpectedly.

While most people find it very hard to acquire even a modest competency, others are more lucky, and to them fortunes come without even the asking. Several such instances have occurred of late years, some of them of an interesting character. It was only a short while since that a poor rag-picker in Birmingham suddenly found himself a man of wealth. By dint of working from dawn till late at night he had been in the habit of making the not very exorbitant income of $2.50 per week.

One morning he heard from a firm of solicitors in London, who requested him to call, when he would learn something to his advantage. He found that a long-lost brother who had made money in Australia, had recently died there, leaving him a sum of 2,000 pounds sterling.

At Tamworth, England, a tobaconist has unexpectedly found himself the heir to a baronetcy. For some time past he has been in receipt of 25s. 6d. per week, having served as a sergeant in the Suffolk regiment; but finding this sum inadequate he took a tobacco shop at Tamworth, and was apparently contented with his lot, when he awoke to find himself a baronet of the United Kingdom.

A schooner which went ashore off the American coast with 1,200 tons of coal, being abandoned by her owners, was sold for 70 pounds sterling. Some 400 tons of coal had been got out of the hull, when suddenly the vessel slid off the rock and sank in deep water, only, however, to float again the next morning, and drift with the tide right into port.

It seems that sufficient coal had rattled through the holes in her bottom to let the hull again come to the surface with some 300 tons of coal still in it. As the vessel then stood she was worth $3,000 or more to those who bought it for £70.

A couple of lucky domestics have lately come into possession of a considerable sum of money through the death of their mistress, an old lady of eighty-five, who left them her entire fortune.

The sum to be divided is $120,000, and it is bequeathed to them in recognition of their long and faithful services, one of them having been twenty-five years and the other eighteen with the lady in question.

The effects produced by suddenly acquired wealth are sometimes startling in the extreme. A suburban Parisian, who lately inherited 16,000 pounds sterling from an elderly aunt, at once began to look about for some outlet for spending money quickly. At length the craze for building speculation seized him and he built houses wherever sites were obtainable.

He went on in this way for some time until his mind became unhinged, and he was found one day walking around his newly built houses, firing shots from a navy revolver at imaginary enemies. He was thereupon arrested and placed in an asylum.

About Harem Baths.

It has remained for a German newspaper woman, Adele Stern, to penetrate the mysteries of the Sultan's harem. She says:

"Along the walls are low settees. In the middle of the room stands a magnificent Turkish clock. Near by is a mangal, an open metallic stove, from which momes daintily perfumed heat. On the top is a big bronze pot, in which delicious mocha is being brewed. At every other step is a sort of cradle, in which rest from one to three children.

"The dolce far niente of Turkish female life can nowhere be better studied than in a bath. The women of the harem enter the bath early in the morning, and spend from an hour to a whole day there.

"And now to the bath itself. It is a veritable fairyland. The soft, damp air, the white marble, the perfumed steam, all help the illusion of being in some Nivie land. Right before me, splashing in the water, are two nymphs. Their immense black eyes glance sadly at me from beneath a mass of raven-black hair. Their forms are exquisite, white as the alabaster surrounding them, and with skin as soft as the richest velvet.

"The bath finished, I am once more ushered into the dressing-room. I drink a cup of coffee and depart."

GIRLS WHO RIDE THE GOAT.

Harrowing Initiatory Ceremonies of a Club in Oklahoma.

Not by any means the least interesting feature of Ponca City, Ok., is its Bachelor Girls' Club, although the bustling little place has other attractions. For one thing, it is the greatest live stock center in the Cherokee strip, besides which its streets are daily alive with real Indians, and in addition it can boast of a population about as heterogeneous as can be found in the West. Banker and bandit, cattle king and cow puncher, rich and poor from everywhere, Indians, negroes, Mexicans and Chinamen, touch elbows on the street. Being comparatively a new country the section is peculiarly adapted for the development of new ideas, and to this may, perhaps, be attributed the existence of a girls' club, whose ritual, by-laws, rules and regulations are refreshingly breezy.

Not all of the ceremonies have been committed to paper and information regarding some of them is only to be gained as it is given out piecemeal by the young ladies to bosom friends, whose assistance they desire in keeping secrets, but the St. Louis Republic has obtained enough information to enable it to give something of the initiatory ceremonies, together with some interesting illustrations.

Members are initiated in a style which, according to all accounts, puts Masons, Odd Fellows and such old-fogy organizations to the blush. During the initiation of new members the room is dimly lighted by wax tapers, and ghostly figures, clad in long white robes, wearing high peaked white caps and having their features concealed by white masks, float noiselessly through the room, so that even the silence is awe-inspiring. When the high priestess speaks it is in hollow tones that strike the novitiate dumb with fear. The ritual is a most interesting document.

The candidate is required to "promise by the Great Horn Spoon" to remain forever in "the honorable, laudable and enjoyable state of bachelor girlhood," and also binds herself, should it ever be her "misfortune to be the victim of a proposal of marriage, to report the occurrence, with full details as to respiration, pulse and temperature during the ordeal." She is also required to equip herself with a pistol and to perfect herself in its use. The arts of fencing and boxing must be carefully studied. After taking the obligation the candidate, blindfolded of course, becomes the central figure in a grand frolic, and if she be inclined to old-maidish ways so much the worse for her. A mechanical contrivance called the goat cuts no small figure in the festivities, the candidate being compelled to ride all around the room on the frisky beast, after which it attacks her in the fashion peculiar to that animal. Should a candidate marry she is bound to invite the entire club, all members attending the wedding in lodge-room costume.

Miss Carrie Clapp, a young lady of accomplishment, is president of the Bachelor Girls' Club. Miss Laura Gaut, as vice president, and Miss Mae De Ford, as secretary, complete the official trio. The absence of a treasurer is accounted for by one of the by-laws, which stipulates that all moneys received by the club shall be immediately expended for confections.

It is said that half of the girls are engaged now and that the balance hope to be this season.

THE CEREMONIAL OF THE BACHELOR GIRLS' SOCIETY.

Postage Stamps.

The design of the stamp is engraved on steel, and, in printing, plates are used on which 200 stamps have been engraved. Two men are kept busy at work covering these with colored inks, and passing them to a man and a girl who are equally busy printing them with large rolling hand presses. Three of these little squads are employed all the time. After the small sheets of paper containing 200 printed stamps have dried enough they are sent into another room and gummed. The gum made for this purpose is a peculiar composition, made of the powder of dried potatoes and other vegetables, mixed with water. After having been again dried—this time on little racks fanned by steam power—for about an hour, they are very carefully put between sheets of pasteboard and pressed in hydraulic presses capable of applying a weight of 2,000 tons. The next thing is to cut the sheets in two, each sheet, of course, when cut, containing 100 stamps. This is done by a girl with a large pair of shears, cutting by hand being preferred to that by machinery, which would destroy too many stamps. They are then passed to another squad of workers, who perforate the paper between the stamps. Next they are pressed once more and then packed and labeled and stowed away, to be sent out to the various offices when ordered. If a single stamp is torn or in any way mutilated, the whole sheet of 100 stamps is burned. Not less than 50,000 are said to be burned every week from this cause. The greatest care is taken in counting the sheets of stamps, to guard against pilfering by the employes.—Ashton Recorder.

ST. GILES' CHURCH.

Historical Edifice Which Was Damaged by the Recent Fire.

This historic edifice, which was badly damaged in the recent great fire in London, dates from 1545, in which year it was rebuilt after a fire. It is the burial place of Foxe, author of the "Book of Martyrs," Frobisher, the Arctic voyager, and Milton. At its altar Cromwell was married to Elizabeth Bowchier Aug. 20, 1620. The church was founded in 1090, and the original edifice stood until toward the end of the fourteenth century, when it was replaced by the one destroyed in 1545. The building as it stood before the fire was substantially as reconstructed at that time.

Cementing Leather to Iron.

To cement leather to iron, cut the leather roughly to shape, allowing about one inch per foot in the width of the pulley. Then soak the leather in water until it is wet through. Now stretch it well in the direction of the circumference of the pulley and cut it to exact shape and length. It should next be sewn up butt to butt with a shoemaker's awl and thread, and the leather, having been stretched in the direction of the circumference only, will, as it gets dry, have a tendency to resume its former shape, thereby shortening in circumference and "clip" to the pulley. A shallow groove might be made for the stitches to sink in.

The Rise of Cities.

Europe has four times as many cities as it had in 1831, and the United States fourteen times as many.

Reputations Made in a Day

Are precious scarce. Time tries the worth of a man or medicine. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a forty-five years' growth, and like those hardy lichens that garnish the crevices of Alaska's rocks, it flourishes perennially, and its reputation has as firm a base as the rocks themselves. No medicine is more highly regarded as a remedy for fever and ague, bilious remittent, constipation, liver and kidney disorders, nervousness and rheumatism.

Time to Hurry.

A new method of reckoning time is reported from Washington by way of the Star:

"There is such a thing as becoming too much devoted to the bicycle," said a young woman. "I was riding with a friend of mine who demonstrated that fact."

"Did she talk continually about the wheel?"

"No, she didn't talk about anything until I asked her if she knew what the hour was. She looked down at her cyclometer and said we'd better hurry home, as it was two miles and a quarter past dinner-time."

Deafness Can't Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that we cannot cure by taking Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Do You Know that There Is Science in Neatness? Be Wise and Use

SAPOLIO

is to keep some Pearline in a sifter, ready to use for floor-washing, dish-washing, etc., etc. You sprinkle a little over the floor, for instance, and then just wash it over with a wet cloth. See how much more convenient to use than soap, to say nothing of the easier work!

If you're buying and using Pearline simply for washing clothes, and not for all kinds of washing and cleaning, you're cheating yourself out of a great deal of comfort and economy. 347

MILLIONS NOW USE PEARLINE

As a nerve tonic Ripans Tabules have no equal. They invigorate the mind and strengthen the nerves, and more, they keep the stomach in good condition. A student of the University of Pennsylvania recently said: "Just prior to the closing examinations I was compelled to work exceedingly hard, as the course is an exceptional one. I was up until two and three o'clock in the morning studying. This was something I was not used to, and as a result my system was upset. It became exceedingly difficult for me to concentrate my mind upon the work, and as for remembering, why, my head at times seemed a vacuum. I consulted a physician, but his prescription failed to bring relief. Then I was advised to try Ripans Tabules and did so, and to my great delight was benefited immediately. After only a second dose I was restored to my wonted condition of good health and vigor of mind, and passed my examinations successfully. I even graduated with honors. I gladly add my testimonial to that of thousands of others who assert that for strengthening the nerves and toning the system Ripans Tabules HAVE NO PEER."

A new style packet containing TEN RIPANS TABULES is a popular option (without glass) is now for sale at some drug stores—FOR FIVE CENTS. This low-priced sort is intended for the poor and the economical. One dozen of the five-cent cartons (120 tabules) can be had by mail by sending forty-eight cents to the RIPANS CHEMICAL COMPANY, No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. A single carton (TEN TABULES) will be sent for five cents.

IDEAL GRANDMOTHERS.

Women Who Know the Laws of Nature and Obey Them May Live to Green Old Age.

Mrs. Pinkham Says When We Violate Nature's Laws Our Punishment Is Pain—If We Continue to Neglect the Warning We Die.

Providence has allotted us each at least seventy years in which to fulfill our mission in life, and it is generally our own fault if we die prematurely.

Nervous exhaustion invites disease. This statement is the positive truth.

When everything becomes a burden and you cannot walk a few blocks without excessive fatigue, and you break out into perspirations easily, and your face flushes, and you grow excited and shaky at the least provocation, and you cannot bear to be crossed in anything, you are in danger; your nerves have given out; you need building up at once! To build up woman's nervous system and restore woman's health, we know of no better or more inspiring medicine than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Your ailment taken in time can be thrown off, if neglected it will run on into great suffering and pain.

Here is an illustration. MRS. LUCY GOODWIN, Holly, W. Va., says:

"I suffered with nervous prostration, faintness, all-gone feeling and palpitation of the heart. I could not stand but a few moments at a time without having that terrible bearing-down sensation.

"When I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I only weighed 108 pounds, and could not sit up half a day; before, however, I had used a whole bottle, I was able to be about. I took in all about three bottles of the Compound, and am entirely cured; now I weigh 131 pounds and feel like a new woman, stronger and better than ever in my life."

So it transpires that because of the virtues of Mrs. Pinkham's wonderful Compound, even a very sick woman can be cured and live to a green old age.

MONTHLY SUFFERING.

Thousands of women are troubled at monthly intervals with pains in the head, back, breasts, shoulders, sides hips and limbs. But they need not suffer.

These pains are symptoms of dangerous derangements that can be corrected. The menstrual function should operate painlessly.

McELREE'S

makes menstruation painless, and regular. It puts the delicate menstrual organs in condition to do their work properly. And that stops all this pain. Why will any woman suffer month after month when Wine of Cardui will relieve her? It costs $1.00 at the drug store. Why don't you get a bottle to-day?

For advice, in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, "The Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. ROZENA LEWIS, of Gonzalitis, Texas, says: "I was troubled at monthly intervals with terrible pains in my head and back, but have been entirely relieved by Wine of Cardui."

WANTED ARSENIC.

Unknown Man Attempts Suicide Here This Morning.

A middle aged, respectable looking man appeared on our streets this morning, with a fair sized bundle, under his arm and a zealous longing for poison. He went into McCord's drugstore and asked the boy for arsenic. Mr. McCord, came to the front and asked the stranger what he wanted to do with so much arsenic He replied that he had not made up his mind fully as to that, and repeated his request. Mr. McCord said he believed he was just out of that particular brand of medicines, and the man went away. Soon after, he came in again and wanted some arsenic fixed up in a wine glass of water, as he preferred usually to take it that way. He wanted it for physic. Mr. McCord repeated that he was out of arsenic, and the man again went off. He made a similar request of Mr. Phillips at Davenport's drugstore, and Mr. Phillips realizing that no one would need a dollar's worth of arsenic for any good purpose, refused. Nor would he fix up any in a wine glass. Then the stranger got around to Fischler's drugstore and was refused the poison there. He said he took it morning for physic and wanted it mixed up with water and lemon juice added. But Fischler did not see things that way. He seemed to be mumbling in an incoherent way, just as he had been at the other places, and finally said he believed he knew where he could get some at a brick house. Finally some one went and informed Sheriff Stroh, and he with Marshal Potter came to take the man in tow. When asked to go with them, he asked, "What do you want of me? I have no money." But they persuaded him to go, and when he approached the court house, he objected to going in. He said he had no use for "going into any darned opera house." But they took him into the sheriff's office and shut out further observation from the vulgar eyes of the public. It was later learned that he gave no reliable information as to himself. He would at each time he was asked, give a different place as his home, and he would not give a reasonable answer as to his name. He was finally taken to the jail and locked up.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDER'S MEETING

Office of the First National Bank,
Auburn, Ind. Dec. 8, 1896

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Stockholders of the First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana, will be held on THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1898.

At the banking house of said bank in Auburn, Indiana, between hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, for the purpose of electing seven (7) directors to serve for the ensuing year, and to transact such other business as may regularly come before such meeting.

CHARLES MCCLELLAN,
Cashier.

WHAT IT MEANS

When we advertise that we will guarantee Dr. King's New Discovery. Electric Bitters, Bucklen Arnica Salve, or Dr. King's New Life Pills, it means that we are authorized by the proprietors to sell these remedies on a positive gurantee that if purchaser is not satisfield with results we will refund the purchase price. These medicines have been sold on this guarantee for many years and there could be no more conclusive evidence of their great merit. Ask about them and give them a trial. Sold at H. B. McCord's drugstore.

READ THE REPORT

Mr. Boland, acting auditor believes the people have a right to know everything that is done in the county offices, and especially everything connected with the county finances. The taxpayers have a right to see in print every item of expense made and money paid out, and Mr. Boland is giving this and will keep it up. Every order drawn for all purposes will be shown in one report or another. The report we publish to-day, shows the transactions in the county's business for six months, and is a good showing. It will be seen that quite a large sum has been collected in various places, and used to pay on the county's debt, the six months showing $13,882.21 used for that purpose. This is encouraging, and gives promise that the wiping out of the whole debt will come in the near future. Let everyone read these reports carefully.

A METHODICAL SHOPPER.

"Well, John, I'm going shopping.
My list is now complete;
I know just where to purchase,
From reading last night's sheet.
It really is so handy,
When one no time can waste,
To take notes from the ad-page,—
Then one can shop in haste.

"I'll buy those shirts you needed
From Jones' special sale;
To choose a dress for Minnie
At Bishop & Lackey's I cannot fail.
I see that Trentman's book-store
Sells Riley's works in calf,
I think I'll get a a copy—
The price is cut one half

"I'll get some of that china
That Hodge advertised.
Tho' cheap, 'twill fire as nicely
As dear grades, I'm advised.
Then for that wedding present
To Olds' I shall go.
His ad held forth such offers,
I'll get one there, I know.

And then I'll get some granite ware
At holidays the're fine,
B., C. & Boland have them
And all things in that line.

We'll want some fruits for Christmas
Such as Kruger and Garrett keep,
Or a stove from the "Old Pioneer"
Or R. Shull's shoes so cheap.

McCord has nice perfumery,
Fred. Y. has presents fair,
And I'll get some Dingers, of Bishop
You like their fragrance rare.

At Davenport's they've lovely dolls,
And baby'll want one sure.
And Dan can get a book there too,
With pictures nice and pure.

"I'll meet you at the office
In just two hours, my dear.
I won't spend all my money,
Nor ask more, never fear."
"Well, well, said John, I never Knew how she planned before,
Nor what a guide to shoppers
Each day came to our door.

"Hereafter I'll consider
The ads with more concern.
From pondering their offers,
Economy may learn.
No need to buy hap-hazard
While bargains wait galore.
Those merchants all deserve success.
Who advertise their store."

THE AUSTRIAN BABEL.

In speaking of the recent political quarrels in the Austro-Hugarian congress, one is reminded of the great variety of peoples and tongues that have been united to make up that nation, or rather that combination of nations. The writer of this has a piece of their paper money, or "fractional currency," "Scheidemuenze" they call it. And on this one piece the incriptions are in ten different tongues, as it would appear neccessary to have them on the face of their money, in order that it might pass readily. And speaking of this same plurality of peoples, the Chicago Record gives the following list of them:

The archduchy of Austria.
The duchy of Salzburg.
The duchy of Styria.
The principalities of Tyrol, Vorarlberg and Leichtenstein.
The kingdom of Bohemia.
The margravate of Moravia.
The duchy of Silesia.
The kingdom of Galicia and Lodomeria.
Bukowina.
The kingdom of Illyria, composed of:
The duchy of Carinthia.
The counties of Carniola, Gorizia and Gradisca.
The city and territory of Trieste (free town.)
The margravate of Istria.
The kingdom of Dalmatia, including:
The republic of Ragusa.
The Bocche di Cattaro and the Primorie.
The kingdom of Croatia and Slavonia.
The Miltary Frontier.
The Volvodina and Banat.
The kingdom of Hungary proper.
The principally of Transylvania.
The sanjaks of Bosnia, Herzegovina and Novi—Bazaar (Rascia).

GEORGE RENTON DEAD.

Garrett, Ind., Dec. 3, 1897.

Special to DAILY COURIER

Geo. Renton, of Garrett, died this morning after an illness entending over a period of six months. He is a member of the K. P. of Chicago, and his father is a G. A. R and the funeral will be under the auspices of both orders here. Both father and son have always been prominent citizens.

Demorest's Magazine.

This lovely monthly for December is a thing of beauty. It sends out a beautiful picture in colors "Helping Mamma" which is given to each subscriber and is a present fit for the best. Then, too, this number is replete with the finest engravings, the portraits of noted people that fill the page of their "Portrait Album," as well as the illustrations of the excellent articles. Among these last named are the illustrations in "Millets Barbizon" and the article on E. H. Southern. There is no step backward, in the progress of Demorest's Magazine.

WITHOUT A DOUBT,

Unquestionable Proof that Effect of LaGrippe is Cured by

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

The number of physical wrecks resulting from the La Grippe is truly alarming. The peculiarity of the disease asserts itself after the attack, by becoming seated in some of the nerve centers, usually the brain. The many remedies and methods of treatment by physicians have little if any benefit. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer has proven to be a specific, it cures every case. A recent instance coming to our notice, is that of Joseph Lee, Entrican, Mich., who writes the following under date of Oct. 31st.

"I was prostrated from the effects of La Grippe; during the first six months I was treated constantly by two physicians without benefit. I then changed and was treated by another during the six months following with same result. I continued to grow worse until I could not sleep day or night; my mind was harassed by evil thoughts—I was frantic. In this condition I commenced using Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; after taking one bottle I felt much better; I took two more and was restored to health. I heartily endorse Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer; for all forms of nervous disease." Signed Joseph Lee. Nerves are alike in all, you can be cured as Mr. Lee was.

If you have not fully recovered from La Grippe use this valuable medicine at once. Your case is the same as thousands of others cured by it. It cures every case.

AN EPITAPH.

The danger of using porcelain letters on a tombstone is illustrated in a village cemetery not far from St. Louis. The inscription reads:

"Oh, Lord,
She is thin."

The finale "e" had been knocked off in a thunderstorm.

THEATER PROPERTIES.

(Chicago Record.)

Somebody who has kept tally on the destruction of property in the course of the production of William Gillett's "Secret Service" makes a report which would astound a conscientious dealer in second-hand goods. Every night Miss Ross jabs a pair of scissors into the confederate gray trousers and cuts off one leg at the ankle. She has already ruined about thirty pairs. In the telegraph scene when help for the villian has arrived down the corridor and Mr. Gillette cries: "Break down the door!" they do break it into kindlings. That takes a new door every night. In the scene of the shooting of the spy a pane of glass is shattered and in other parts of the play material, the value of which piles up in the course of a long season, is made useless. All this makes for the interest of the production, however. It the same way a team now putting on a "juggling turn" at Hopkins' theater bids for and receives great applause by breaking up crockery and china. This team, in the course of a few minutes of burlesque juggling, shatters something like thirty plates, bowls and platters, but as the spectators go wild with joy at the exhibition of awkward sleight-of-hand, the act is considered a huge success, and the supers cheerfully rake off the great pile of fragments which accumulates.

K. O. T. M. ELECTION.

At the regular meeting of the K. O. T. M. lodge last night the following were elected:

Geo. Quince, Commander; R. A. Wilson, Lieut. Commander; Geo. Snyder, Record Keeper, Frank Reed, Finance Keeper; Curt Elson, Chaplain; Perry Feagler, Sergeant; Wm. Brown, 1st Master Guards; George Healey, 2nd Master Guards; Geo Campbell, Master at Arms; S. P. Imhoff, Sentinel; Curt Eckert, Picket; Rev. J. D. Brosy, Trustee.

SCROFULA.

One of America's most famous physicians says: "Scrofula is external consumption." Scrofulous children are often beautiful children, but they lack nerve force, strong bones, stout muscles and power to resist disease. For delicate children there is no remedy equal to of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda. It fills out the skin by putting good flesh beneath it. It makes the cheeks red by making rich blood. It creates an appetite for food and gives the body power enough to digest it. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

"UP AND DOING"

Are the Temperance People of Angola and Vicinity.

Angola, Ind., Dec. 4, '97.

Special to the Daily Courier.

Last night the temperance workers of Angola and Pleasant township, filed remonstrances with the Auditor of Steuben county against Lorin Crandall and W. J. Miller, who have applied for license to sell liquor. The remonstrances codtained the signatures of 587 votes, 106 more than was required. It was the largest poll ever taken in this township. The temperance people are "up and doing" and intend to wage war against the saloons until not one remains in the northeast county of the Hoosier state.

COLUMBIAN QUARTERS.

D. A. Garwood is the possessor of a Columbian quarter dollar, one of the very rare coins issued by the managers of the Woman's Department at the World's Fair. Only 10,000 of these silver quarters were struck for them by the mint, but they were sold at $1 a piece bringing them $10,000 with a net gain of $7.500. It appears that all who get one, laid it away as a souvenir, and none are in circulation. Consequently they are very scarce and command a good price. They have a picture of Queen Isabella, and appropriate inscriptions while the half dollars had the picture of Columbus. They are rather prettier than the half dollars.

BLADDER TROUBLES

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, a receptancle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfect action of the kidneys. The second way is from careless local treatment of other diseases.

SAMPLE SENT FREE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder troubles It is comforting to know that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root fulfills every wish in quickly curing bladder and urinary troubles It corrects frequent calls, inability to hold urine and scalding or stinging pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressinfl cases If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention Auburn COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

THE SUCKER

Gerrymander of Illinois Meets Dec. 7.

The legislature of Illinois has been called to meet in extra session suddenly, starting in tomorrow Dec. 7. The cause of the extra session is a desire on the part of the republican candidates for U. S. Senator to secure a majority in the next legislature. They will reapportion it so that the democrats will be pretty certain to lose the legislature no matter what majority they may have in the popular vote. But it seems that fair men of all parties will be glad when U. S. Senators are chosen by a popular vote.

THE DICOVERY OF THE DAY

Aug. J. Bogel, the leading druggist of Shreveport La., says: "Dr. Kings New Discovery is the only thing that cures my cough, and it is the best seller I have." J. F. Campbell, merchant of Safford, Ariz, writes: "Dr, King's New Discovery is all that is claimed for it; never fails, and is a sure cure for Consumption, Coughs and Colds I cannot say enough for its merits." Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumtion, Coughs and Colds is not an experiment. It has been tried for a quarter of a century, and today stands at the head. It never disappoints. For trial bottles at H. B. McCord's drugstore,

A NEW PAPER.

"The Hustler" is the name of a new paper just started at the ambitious and enterprising town of Hamilton. It is a five column quarto and the first number which was issued last Thursday is a very lively local paper. It is especially noticeable for its many advertisements, which go to show that Hamilton is full of live business men, who will, while helping themselves in this way, also help the paper, which in turn will help the town. We notice among these our friend O. P. Learned who advertises the Hamilton Bank of which he is president, Jay Learned and T. W. Thomas being cashiers. Then there is J. B. Zeigler, the veteran harness dealer, the general store of Learned, Thomas & Co., and many other names not as familiar to us. We do not know how good an opening it is for the publisher W. O. Warner, but we admire his grit and the enterprise of his patrons. We hope to see the Hustler hustle things for its town and publisher. We put the Hustler on our exchange list with pleasure.

BAD FOR COTTON MILLS.

A Saturday dispatch for the great cotton manufacturing center of Fall River, Mass., brings word of a big reduction in the wages of employes, and the prospect of much trouble and hard times. It says:

The action of the Manufacturers' association in deciding to reduce the wages of about 27,000 operatives in this city has caused no end of excitement. The operatives have been expecting a cut for the past three weeks. The cut will mean a loss to the operatives and tradesmen of about $18,000 weekly.

Cloth is quoted at 2¼ cents, the lowest price in the history of the trade. The mills have a surplus on hand of 2,000,000 pieces of goods, and the surplus is still increasing. The operatives will hold meetings to decide whether they will submit to the cut. It is the general feeling, however, that the operatives will strike. They claim that they are better organized than ever.

FAIR TRIAL

It is Postponed, Chief Witness Being Sick.

Thursday's Daily.

The trial of Perry Fair has been put off till the next term of the Angola court. Yesterday, a part of the witnesses were in attendance. and the jury got ready. The regular jury was fully and carefully examined and every man was kept on. Then they would have been ready to proceed, but the prosecuting witness, Mrs. Archie Smith, of Waterloo, was not present. So they telephoned to her, but received answer that she was sick, and could not come. Then court was adjourned to meet at 10 this, Thursday, forenoon. On reassembling this morning, word was received that Mrs. Smith was worse and could not come. So the case was put over till next term, which is in February. So the witnesses came home this morning on the south bound forenoon train. Our informant was Mr. McIntosh, who was among the witnesses called up to attend. As the trial is not being carried out, Mr. Sawvel will have nothing to do but go back.

FROM C. TO Z.

There is a good joke out on Ben Zeigfer. He and T. A. Carter came into Davenport's drugstore yesterday, and Zeigler asked Carter to have a cigar, which was agreed to and Zeigler gave Davenport a half dollar in payment, Davenport got the change, 40 cents, and laid it on the show case, but Zeigler did not notice this, as just then a lady came in asked for a seat at the Opera House. Just then, Zeigler spied the 40 cents, and thinking it belonged to Davenport or some one else, he suggested that Carter take that money and "set up" the cigars again, for a joke on Davenport. Carter did so, buying of Phillips. The latter got the cigars, made change, and asked as to whom it was to be given. This set Zeigler to thinking and he discovered it was his own money he had been so free with. He offered to set up 25 cents more. Then all had a laugh, followed by an adjournment.

The Coming Woman

who goes to the club while her husband tends the baby, as well as the good old-fashioned woman who looks after her home, will both at times get run down in health. They will be troubled with loss of appetite, headaches, sleeplessness fainting or dizzy spells. The most wonderful remedy for these women is Electric Bitters. Thousands of sufferers from Lame Back and Weak Kidneys rise up and call it blessed. It is the medicine for women. Female complaints and Nervous troubles of all kinds are soon relieved by the use of Electric Bitters. Delicate woman should keep this remedy on hand to build up the system. Only 50 cents a bottle. MRS. McKINLEY DEAD

The venerable mother of the President died Sunday morning at 2 o'clock, passing peacefully away as if in sleep. She had not shown any sign of consciousness since her son came to her bedside on his return from Washington Tuesday. Then she roused up for a moment, put her arms about his neck, and nodded assent when asked if she knew him. In a few minutes she was again unconscious, and remained so till the end came. All her children were at her bedside. The funeral is Tuesday at 1 p. m.

SAWVEL HERE.

Thursday's Daily.

Mr. Sawvell came home yesterday a companied by Mr. Sutton, the guard who came down with the prisoners the first time they came home. Sawvel was summoned as a witness in the trial of Perry Fair, now going on at Angola, and went to the evening train to go up there. But while waiting they received a phone message from Judge Roby, that he need come on that train as they were not ready to use him yet. So he remained here, to go up to day on the noon train. Judge Watkins of Huntington is to try the case.

Friday's Daily.

Mr. Sawvel and Guard Sutton went up to Angola yesterday, and returned. Today they go back to Michigan City, on the B. & O. noon train. Mr. Sawvel was called as a witness for the defense, but admits that he knows nothing whatever about the case. It is probably not very pleasant for these witnesses to be called here, but they have no choice but to come when the court calls.

AUBURN COURIER.

GENTS:—Enclosed find draft for $3 which you will please place to our credit.

A few words from this part of Uncle Sam's domains will probably interest some of our friends. I see by your valuable paper that one of the Indiana boys at Charleston, this state, is not faring very well, owing to low price of cotton. From my observation I find it almost universal that those who depend entirely on cotton for a living are very poor, financially, while in our county, Crawford, the farmers have partially dropped cotton, and have drifted into berry and fruit raising, which is a source of great wealth.

In the early Spring we shipped from this city 104 cars of strawberries, 25 cars of blackberries and raspberries, 35 cars of peaches' 70 cars of potatoes, 20 cars of vegetables, besides the numerous small shipments by express. There will be over 20,000 bales of cotton marketed this year in VanBuren. So you can see that our farmers are in a very prosperous condition. We have been very busy at the shop all summer and are enjoying good health and trust our friends are equally blessed. With best wishes we remain.

WASTING THE GAS.

The waste of gas in the Indiana gas belt is likely to be stopped. It had been suggested that the governor call the legislature in extra session to make some more laws on the subject. But as the COURIER recently suggested, we already have laws enough to stop this waste. And now it seems that people are waking up to this fact. Petitions have been circulated and meetings held, with the object of calling attention to this evil, and funds have been raised to help pay costs in court and attorneds to do the fighting. And to show that the people in the gas belt are in earnest, they are expecting to employ Judge Byron K. Elliott, who was so many years chief justice of the Indiana Supreme court, and probably the best lawyer in the state. The trouble has been that ever since gas was struck in Indiana, a portion of it was allowed to go to waste. Parties would put down a well, get a gusher then, attach a pipe to it, and let it burn day and night A first thing was done partly to boom that country. People going through on trains could see the torches burning, and get interested in the natural gas boom. It no doubt helped a little in that way. But as the years went on, this was no longer desirable, for any purpose. All that went to waste would naturally help to exhaust the supply that much sooner, and became a serious evil. The people of the gas belt began to get nervous about it. Then they complained, and finally have gone in delegations to the governor, to see if something could not be done. The governor proved very slow to see the point, but at last he has said he will help to see that the existing law against wasting natural gas, is enforced. So there is likely to be a general movement to force parties to confine the flow of the wells to such pipes only as are used in actual business at the factories or in houses.

Judge Baker is correct. The people who purchase a newspaper want the news. In this day and generation newspapers are expected to do impossible things because they have taught the readers to believe they can get news by intuition if not by the ordinary means of procuring it. If there are secrets to be kept in the grand jury room, or in the courts, it is the duty of those intrused with them to keep their oaths inviolate. If they are leaky and the newpaper puts its spout in proper position, who will blame the newspaper for its enterprise? If any spout is to be mended, let the soldering iron be put where the leak occurs.

READY FOR BATTLE.

Important Engagement About to Be Fought Near Havana.

A dispatch from Havana says: An important battle is expected hourly. The insurgents have planned the most formidable demonstration against Havana for a year. Gen. Paredas has started from this city with strong columns of troops to meet the Cubans. Senor Canalejas, the confidential agent of the Spanish Government, went with him to ascertain the real condition of Havana Province.

Gen. Maysia Rodrigeuz, with the combined Cuban forces under Juan del Galdo, Nodarez and Rafael de Cardenas, is encamped on La Luisa plantation, near Guira de Melina, about twenty miles south of here, on the railway to Pinar del Rio. He has fully 1,000 men who are well armed, and he is said to have a Hotchkiss rapid firing cannon. The topography of the country about Guira de Melina is favorable to the Spanish troops.

The latest reports of the late engagement in Pinar del Rio Province show that the Spanish losses were greater than was claimed. The dead or wounded include one Colonel, one Major, seven Captains, and seventy-four privates. Most of the wounded will die. The rebel loss was fourteen. The rebels really used explosive bullets. There agents admit it.

Insurgents Capture a Sea Coast Town

Havana special: It is officially announced from Spanish headquarters that a "group of rebels" entered Calmanera, near Gauantanamo, "favored by the treason of an officer." Calmanera is the port of Gauantanamo, and is situated fifteen miles by rail from the latter place. Calmanera is on the Bay of Gauantanamo, otherwise Cumberland Harbor. The insurgents' force, the official report adds, consisted of forty guerillar, volunteers and natives of Cuba. They are alleged to have plundered a store and to have carted off the sum of $30,000, which was on a wharf, and which had recently arrived at Calmanera from Havana. It is also said that the insurgents killed the police inspector and two gendarmes on duty. More Spanish guerillas, the official announcement concludes, have joined the insurgents.

The Crop Conditions.

The Agricultural Department's final estimates relative to the average farm production of the principal crops based largely on the December returns, gives the following: Corn, averages 26.5 cents per bushel against 21.5 last year. Oats, 21.5 cents against 18.7 last year. Barley, 37.7 cents against 32.3 cents last year. Rye, 44.7 cents against 40.9 cents last year. Buckwheat, 42.1 cents against 39.2 last year. Hay, $6.00 per ton against $6.55 last year. Averages for products not given are withheld for revision, as are also estimates of acreage of winter wheat, rye, and the condition of these products.

Oklahoma Sensation.

Something of a sensation has been created at Guthrie, O. T., by the report that Temple Houston of Woodward, son of Sam Houston of Texas fame, will defend the Jennings brothers and their gang when they are put on trial for train robbery and other crimes. Temple Houston killed one of the Jennings brothers in a fight at Woodward, last year, and in the same affray Houston shot Al. Jennings, one of the men whom, it is said, he will defend.

Boy Causes an Explosion.

An explosion of natural gas occurred at Five Points, Ohio, that injured Glenn Porter, a boy, probably mortally, and George Elliot and Anthony Bussert seriously. James Hatfield placed a lighted match in gas escaping from one of the mains entering the village. Porter's hands were nearly blown off, and he is frightfully burned about the face and eyes. The other boys were burned about the face also. Hatfield escaped uninjured.

Justifies Lynching.

Wesson (Miss.) special: News of a terrible tragedy comes across Pearl River. The wife and five children of Brown Smith were murdered by unknown parties while Mr. Smith was absent. The infant child was spared. The sheriff has gone to the scene with bloodhounds. Smith is a son of ex-Representative Smith, of Simpson County.

No Prize Fights in 'Frisco.

The Health and Committee Board of Supervisors of San Francisco put a quietus upon the prize fighting industry there for some time to come, by refusing any more permits for pugilistic or "physical culture" exhibitions to big clubs. This disposes of the Griffo-Lavigue, Hawkins-Connelly and Smith-Kell matches.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne.

The following are the attractions at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Dec. 15—"Coat of Many Colors."
Dec. 18—"Wizard of the Nile."

Another Protest from Japan.

Victoria (B. C.) special: The steamer Tacoma brings news that another protest against the annexation of Hawaii has been forwarded by the Japanese government. The protest is said to be quite similar to that on the subject given once before by Count Okuma.

Novak Sentenced for Life.

The motion for new trial in the case of Frank A. Novak, convicted at Vinton, Iowa, of murder in the second degree, was overruled and the court passed sentence that he be confined to hard labor in the penitentiary at Anamosa for the period of his natural life.

Accommodates the Railroads.

The interstate commerce commission has decided to extend for two years the period within which railroads must comply with the act of Congress requiring all railroads to be equipped with safety appliances for the protection of the employes and passengers.

EXPORTS OF GRAIN ARE LARGE.

Exceed Those of Last Week—Dun's and Bradstreet's Reviews.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "The monthly report of failures shows defaulted liabilities of $11,610,195 in November, against $12,700,856 last year. Because of three large failures for $3,250,000, not due to present conditions, the aggregate in November was only $1,100,000 less than last year, and, except for these, would have been smaller than in August, September or October. Failures for the week have been 306 in the United States, against 379 last year, and 28 in Canada, against 55 last year." Bradstreet's says: "General trade throughout the country has presented rather more animation, owing to colder weather and the approaching holidays. While clothing, dry goods, hats, shoes and notions, hardware and fancy groceries, have been in a little better demand from both jobbers and at retail in the region tributary to Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, St. Joseph, St. Paul and Kansas City, the tendency of business has been to slacken. This is noticeable in iron and steel and in further depression in cotton goods, print cloths having made a new low record in price. The total exports of wheat (flour included as wheat) from both coasts of the United States and from Montreal this week aggregate 6,699,960 bushels, 1,300,000 bushels larger than last week. Corn exports show a heavy gain over last week, aggregating 4,585,806 bushels, against 2,869,000 bushels last week. Exports of other cereals, such as oats, rye, barley and buckwheat, have also been very large, and the total value of our cereal exports during the week just closed promises to be fully $9,000,000."

QUAKERS AT WAR.

Great Religious Excitement and Some Damage in an Eastern Village.

Religious persecutions in Quakertown, a small village near Norwich, Conn., have reached such a point that a serious climax may result. A month ago the members of the old families decided that the present youth and maiden were being allowed too much levity, and it was to meet this want of seriousness that a religious awakening was decided upon. All went well for a time. Solomon Crouch, a carpenter, who was the leader, is a Quaker by birth, but not being a native of Quakertown the young folks looked upon him as an outsider, and some of them distrusted him. He claims to have special revelations from God, and what is revealed to him he preaches to the people. It is reported that Crouch went to the home of Lucy Whipple, wife of Allen Whipple. She told the revivalist she did not believe in his alleged revelations. At this the revivalist is alleged to have become greatly enraged and struck her in the face with a knife. The next morning the Whipple house was burned to the ground, while the neighbors looked on. The following night the older Quakers met in council. The entire neighborhood gathered at the outskirts of the village, and decided to run Crouch out. Armed with shotguns, it is alleged, they surrounded Watrous' house and called for Crouch to appear. He and his followers made a stanch stand, and, it is said, notwithstanding that charges of buckshot were exchanged, nobody was seriously hurt. During a lull in the fight Crouch and Watrous are reported to have escaped under the cover of darkness.

MEETS A STRANGE DEATH.

William Evarts, of St. Clair, Mo., is Hanged Between Two Palings.

William Evarts of St. Clair, Mo., came to his death under peculiar circumstances. He was found hanging to a high paling fence. His neck was wedged firmly between two palings. His feet were clear of the ground and his neck was broken. Evarts had been working about his home and had used a wheelbarrow. When the body was found the wheelbarrow was partly under it. His pockets were empty, but it is not known whether he had anything with him or not. Those who saw him say he was cheerful and had not been drinking, and it is believed he must have fallen on the fence and caught between the palings.

A Modern Sapphira.

Gertrude Turecek, a precocious New York City child of 14 years, has since May last sustained and carried out a most preposterous deception which would make Ananias stand and wonder. The child succeeded between last May and Thanksgiving day in securing from her father, Ferdinand Turecek, $1,400, all of his savings, by saying that the money was for President McKinley. For six months the girl had been obtaining amounts ranging from $10 to $100 on the plea that she was lending the money to President McKinley, who, she said, was staying at the Windsor Hotel and was temporarily short of funds. The Turecek girl came home from school one day last spring and told her mother that Mrs. McKinley had visited the school that day and had taken a great fancy to her. She said that the teacher had asked her to play the piano and recite for the President's wife, and that Mrs. McKinley had been so impressed with her talent that she had asked the girl to call on her at the Windsor. The mother and father of the child believed her story unquestionably. The child returned from the supposed visit and triumphantly announced that Mrs. McKinley was going to adopt her. Later she told her father President McKinley was pressed for ready money, as he didn't want to use checks, and her father gave her $100 to loan him. From time to time, with similar stories, she secured money from her father in the same way. The girl was lavish with her money, and gave presents to all her friends, but most of the things she brought home, saying President McKinley had sent them.

Uncle Sam Will Bid.

The Secretary of the Treasury at Washington has taken the first steps to qualify on behalf of the Government as a bidder at the sale of the Kansas Pacific Railroad on Dec. 16. A transfer order for $900,000 was sent by Treasurer Roberts for certification to the National City Bank of New York in favor of the master of the court having jurisdiction of the case. This order will be delivered to the master five days before the sale by an officer of the Treasury Department, who, it is believed, will bid at the sale under instructions from the President.

Soldier Shoots Himself.

Sergeant John Coghlan of Company A, First Regiment, United States Infantry, shot himself through the head in his quarters at the Presidio, San Francisco, in the presence of his captain, L. P. Brant. Coghlan died instantly. He had been drinking heavily, though until recently he was a model soldier.

Elections in the Bay State.

Seventeen cities of Massachusetts held their municipal elections. In most cases the Republicans were successful in securing control of the city governments, although the results show that the idea of independent or non-partisan control of municipalities is steadily growing in favor.

Jealous Woman's Suicide.

At Dayton, O., Mrs. Lillian Seligstein, aged 25, sent a neighbor for morphine pills and took thirteen of them. She was jealous of her husband.

The African Trouble.

The St. James' Gazette of London announces authoritatively that the British Government does not expect trouble with France regarding the upper Nile regions, France having agreed to accept the situation. Advices received at Lagos, West Africa, from the interior say the French troops had five engagements with the natives before effectively occupying Nikki, the capital of Borgu. The king of the country fled to the bush. Both France and Great Britain claim that the Borgu territory is within the sphere of their influence. Great Britain claims the whole country of Borgu under the Anglo-French convention of 1890. Captain Lugard, for Great Britain outdistanced Commander Decoeur in making a treaty with the King of Borgu, but the French hold that such a treaty is null and void from the fact that France has effectively occupied Dahomey, and is therefore entitled to its Hinterland, in accordance with the spirit and letter of the treaty of Berlin.

PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS.

Argentine Republic Suffering from a Visitation of the Pests.

A cablegram from Buenos Ayres states that while the committee appointed by the Congress of the Argentine Republic to take evidence concerning ways and means of exterminating the locusts is holding two meetings weekly, the plague of these destructive insects is increasing and attaining immense proportions. No portion of the republic is free from their ravages. The parks have not only been stripped of grass and flowers, but giant trees have actually been denuded of their branches. The agricultural communities are in a condition of semi-panic and even commercial trade has been affected. In some districts they are less destructive than in others. All known means of extermination have been employed by the colonists, and while some have been fairly successful, in others they have seemed only to increase the evil.

PROTECTION OF FORESTS.

Annual Meeting of American Forestry Association at Washington.

The American Forestry Association held its sixteenth annual meeting at Washington. Gen. Francis H. Appleton of Boston presided. After a brief report from the board of directors the report of the executive committee was read by the chairman, Dr. B. E. Fennow. The report referred to the legislation passed in the extraordinary session of the present Congress, providing an administration for the Federal forest reservations as a result of educational work of the association during the last ten years. The owning of forest areas, it is said, is being recognized by various States as an essential part of a State forest policy. The tariff legislation was briefly touched upon as influencing neither favorably nor unfavorably the forestry movement.

New Klondike Route.

Felix Sighissa of Genoa and Dr. D. R. de Simono of Naples left San Francisco on an exploring trip they purpose making through the unknown country which lies between the Monica mining district and the Yukon. They are connected with the Italian geographical and geological societies, and the results of the expedition will be turned over to those organizations. Mr. Sighissa is confident he will be able to open up a direct overland route to the Klondike.

Hanged and Riddled with Bullets.

Adam Uber, who killed Hans Anderson at Gardnerville last week, was taken from the Genoa, Nev., jail at 2 o'clock in the morning, stripped of his clothing and hanged. His body was riddled with bullets by a mob of twenty-five men, supposed to be from Gardnerville.

Robbers Shoot a Woman.

Mrs. Emma Schumacher, keeper of a grocery at Kansas City, Mo., was fatally shot by robbers, who demanded the cash in her money drawer. Mrs. Schumacher drew a revolver and was shot down by the robbers. The two men then escaped.

Chickasaws Reject the Treaty.

At the late election in the Chickasaw Nation the ratification of the Dawes-Choctaw treaty was overwhelmingly defeated. The adopted and intermarried citizens were not permitted to participate in the election.

Durrant's Last Hope Gone.

The Supreme Court dispelled the last hope of W. H. T. Durrant, the murderer of Blanch Lamont and Minnie Williams, by disposing in a summary manner of his two appeals.

St. Louis Wars on Poolrooms.

Chief of Police Harrigan of St. Louis says that the pool rooms, which have already been raided four times within a week, will be closed up each day they are found open.

U. P. Makes a Fast Run.

The Union Pacific has again broken records for fast runs. The regular train ran 294 miles, from Galesburg to Council Bluffs, in 286 minutes.

Boat Lost, but All Hands Saved.

News has been received at Empire City, Ore., of the wreck of the gasoline boat Moro, bound from San Francisco to Alza. All lives were saved.

Here Corbett Won His Fame.

The Olympic Theater at New Orleans, where the Corbett-Sullivan fight took place, was wiped out by fire. Loss, $70,000.

CONGRESS AT WORK.

OPENING SCENES OF THE LONG SESSION.

Important Acton May Be Taken Early in Both Houses—Hawaii Is Likely to Be Annexed—Friends of Cuba Are Hopeful.

Annual Grind Begins.

Washington correspondence:

THE regular or long session of Congress, as it is called, because there is no constitutional limitation upon the period of its duration, opened at noon Monday. The leaders and a very large majority of the members of both houses participated in the opening ceremonies, and President McKinley made the journey to Washington from the bedside of his dying mother that his absence might not delay the national legislature at its assembling. The extra session robbed the opening of the regular session of the excitement and interest which usually attach to it. As the House was completely organized at the extra session, and all the committee assignments were made then, beyond the natural stimulus produced by the returning statesmen and the outlining of schemes by members of the "third house" or lobby, Washington on the night preceding the opening was tranquil.

The ceremonies attending the opening of Congress, though comparatively of a routine character, make a spectacle which in some respects is regarded as the greatest official event of the year at the national capital. Monday the weather was propitious. The sun shone brilliantly from a cloudless sky, making a glorious, bright December day, with a tinge of frost in the air to invigorate the lungs and a breeze just strong enough to keep the stars and stripes snapping from the flagstaffs. At the capitol the crowd swarmed into the corridors at an early hour and choked the marble steps as they ascended to the galleries from which they were to view the show. As is usual on such occasions, the reserved galleries were carefully guarded on both the House and Senate sides, admission being only by card, and the public had great difficulty in wedging itself into the limited space set aside for it.

The Hall of Representatives presented an animated appearance long before the hour of noon arrived. The surrounding corridors were filled with jostling, moving crowds, and before 11 o'clock the encircling galleries which overlooked the floor were black with people. The hall buzzed with the subdued hum of conversation as the members exchanged greetings and chatted in groups.

The floral tributes for the members were numerous and in some instances imposing.

The program at the House Monday was very simple. The House was called to order by the Speaker, who, after the chaplain's invocation, directed the Clerk to call the roll. This having been accomplished, and the presence of a quorum demonstrated, the clerk was directed to notify the Senate that the House was ready for business, and a committee was appointed to wait on the President. After that there was a recess to await the arrival of the President's annual message, which was read upon its reception and was followed by an adjournment until Tuesday.

It is the intention of the House leaders to proceed with the business of the session as rapidly as possible. The committees will all begin their labors at once. The appropriations committee has been at work for ten days, and Chairman Cannon expects to pass two of the regular budgets before the holidays.

Among the early general measures to receive consideration will be the bankruptcy bill. Whether it will be the Nelson bill, which passed the Senate at the last session, or a modification of the Torrey bill depends on the temper of the Judiciary Committee, which will submit the measure to the House.

Beyond doubt there will be several resolutions of inquiry during the first week which may be more or less sensational, and some of the radical pro-Cuba members will attempt to get consideration for a Cuban resolution before the Foreign Affairs Committee can act, but owing to the nature of the House rules all these hasty efforts will prove abortive, and they probably will take their regular course.

Simultaneously with the fall of Speaker Reed's gavel in the House, Vice President Hobart called the Senate to order. Half an hour before the Senate convened the public and executive and reserved galleries were filled with spectators to witness the opening of the session. The handsome costumes of the ladies added much to the brightness of the scene. The Senate chamber at the opening was a veritable conservatory. The floral display was unusually rich and beautiful, and the odor of flowers was heavy in the hall. Seventy-seven Senators responded to their names on the roll call.

The Senate to start with had a calendar of about 300 bills reported from the committees during the special session. The indications on the opening day were for a little more activity than usual during the pre-holiday session. This is largely due to the fact that the supporters of the administration and advocates of annexation are very anxious to secure the earliest possible consideration of the treaty with Hawaii. Senator Davis, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, announced his purpose of pressing annexation at the earliest possible moment. One point which the committee will be called upon to decide is whether to proceed to ratify the treaty of annexation or to annex the islands by resolutions. The annexationists have lost some votes during the vacation, and there is now apprehension that the two-thirds vote necessary to assure the ratification cannot be secured. Some members of the Foreigns Relations Committee who favor annexation advocate this course because they say they see no reason for traversing the same ground twice, as they would be compelled to do in case the matter should be first considered in executive session, fail there, and then be taken up in the form of a resolution in open Senate and House.

Despite all opposition, it is not doubted Hawaii will be brought under the stars and stripes. No act of the American Congress in many years past has attracted as much attention throughout the world as the annexation of a distant island is sure to attract.

What Congress will do concerning the President's presentation of the State of our relations to Spain and Cuba only the future can determine. Unless some turn of events rouses public opinion and finds response in Congress it may be regarded as fairly certain the peace policy of the President will be supported by both houses of the national legislature. The President's message, read between the lines, does not indicate that he has abandoned Cuba, but rather that he hopes in the future to achieve the practical independence of that island should Spain's present efforts to restore peace prove fruitless, and by methods which will be the fruits of natural causes, and which will not necessarily bring on war between the United States and Spain.

Other topics which will be sure to cause much talk throughout the world, and some of which may be the subject of actual legislation, are revision of the immigration laws, bankruptcy, pooling by railways, rehabilitation of the interstate commerce commission, prevention of scalping of railway tickets, the Central Pacific Railway's debt to the Government and the revenues of the Government under the Dingley law.

The immigration bill, for which Senator Lodge stands sponsor, is practically at the head of the Senate legislative calendar, and will be considered early in the session. Senator Lodge has repeated his intention of pressing the bill, but he will not antagonize the Hawaiian treaty with it.

The first bill on the calendar is Senator Gear's measure providing for the adjustment of the Pacific Railroad debt, but the sale of the Union Pacific doubtless will have the effect of causing the temporary withdrawal of this bill and the substitution of others. Of the 300 bills on the calendar about 200 are private pension bills, and all of these probably will be disposed of at one sitting when taken up. There are also several hundred recess appointments to be considered in executive session.

ECKELS MAKES REPORT.

Reviews National Banks and Favors Amending Note-Issuing Law.

The annual report of James H. Eckels, Comptroller of the Currency, for the year ended Oct. 31, 1897, opens with a brief review of the history of the legislation which constitutes the present national bank act, and invites the attention of Congress to amendments to the law recommended in former reports without specifically repeating them.

On the subject of bank note circulation the Comptroller says:

It is noticeable that in all the changes which have been wrought in the national currency act from its inception to the present time the feature subject to criticism, but which was intended should constitute the principal benefit to be conferred, has remained comparatively unchanged—namely, the note-issuing function. Whatever justification there was in the first instance for restricting the issuing of notes against the bonds of the Government, deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, to 90 per cent. of the par value thereof, has long since ceased. In the report of every Comptroller of the Currency during the last twenty years the wisdom of changing the existing law so that the banks and through them the communities in which they are located might have the additional benefit of an additional loanable capital has been urged. Despite all this the law still remains without amendment. Not only should the bank act be amended in this particular, but Congress should seriously consider such a change in the method of bank note issues as will enable the banks of the country to more adequately meet the demands of trade and commerce in all sections of the country.

It is considered by every great commercial government, except the United States, to be the sole province of the banks to issue the paper which circulates as currency. The belief in a bank note currency as being better and safer than a government paper currency prevailed unquestioned in this country, until, under the apparent exigencies of the war, the Government undertook to issue paper currency. Even under such circumstances the promise was already given, however, that it should be retired at the earliest practical moment, and the admission freely made that it was neither a wise measure nor a safe form of currency.

Between the competition of the Government note issues on the one hand and the unnecessary restrictions imposed by law upon the other, together with the increasing price of bonds required to be deposited as security, the note issuing function of the banks has been permitted to become merely an incident to the conduct of the national banking associations of the country. It has been seriously suggested more than once that the bank note issues be done away with, and all paper be issued by the Government instead. The danger of such a course is not to be overestimated. The experience of every government has been that governmental currency paper is a source of weakness and danger. In the United States, where there has been the nearest approach to success, with the volume of the Federal paper comparatively limited in amount, the credit of the Government has been more than once put in jeopardy through it, and the business interests of the country subjected to unnecessary loss and confusion.

The argument that the Government better than the banks can provide for the redemption of paper note issue will not stand the test of a careful analysis. The Government has no means for caring for its demand liabilities, except through borrowing and through the levying of taxes. Upon the other hand, the banks have assets which can be promptly converted into cash to meet their outstanding notes when presented.

The total number of national banks organized since the system was put into operation, in 1863, is shown to have been 5,095. On Oct. 31 last there were in active operation 3,617, having an authorized capital of $630,230,295. The total outstanding circulation of the banks then in operation was $229,199,880, of which $202,994,555 was secured by bonds of the United States, and the balance by lawful money deposited with the Treasurer of the United States. The total circulation outstanding of all national banks on Oct. 31 last was $230,131,005, of which amount $1,558,800 was secured by bonds held for account of insolvent and liquidating banks, and $26,205,325 by lawful money deposited for their account and by active banks reducing circulation. The net decrease in the amount of circulation secured by bonds during the year was $12,584,334 and the gross decrease in the total circulation was $4,851,292.

During the year forty-four banks were organized, with an aggregate capital stock of $6,420,000. During the year seventy-one banks went into voluntary liquidation.

There was paid to creditors of insolvent banks during the year $13,169,781 in dividends. The magnitude of this unequaled record, the report says, will be more forcibly illustrated if considered in the light of what has been accomplished heretofore in the way of dividend payments to the creditors of insolvent institutions. In 1893 there was paid in dividends $3,433,646; in 1894, $5,124,577; in 1895, $3,380,552; in 1896, $2,451,959, and in 1897, $13,169,781, making a total of dividends paid within the five years from 1893 to 1897 of $27,560,515, or 36¼ per cent. of all the dividends that have ever been paid to creditors of insolvent banks. From 1863 to 1897 there has been paid in dividends $75,935,925, and in the year embraced in this report $13,169,781, or 17 1-3 per cent. of all the dividends that have been paid during the period of thirty-four years of the existence of the system. Since Oct. 31, the end of the report year, seventeen additional dividends have been ordered, amounting in the aggregate to about $625,000.

The report contains the latest compiled statistics relating to the world's monetary systems, and the stock of gold, silver and paper currency. A very interesting feature of this statement is the per capita amount of each kind of money in the countries named. The per capita averages in the principal countries of the world are as follows:

United States, $23.70; United Kingdom, $20.65; France, $34.68; Germany, $18.95; Austria-Hungary, $9.33, and Russia, $8.95.

The Comptroller renews his recommendation of last year, urging that national bank examiners be paid an annual salary instead of fees as now.

DECEMBER WHEAT $1.06.

This Is the Highest Notch Touched Since the 1891 Corner.

Amid the wildest excitement seen on the Chicago Board of Trade within the memory of the oldest trader December wheat sold for $1.09 Thursday. This is the highest mark which the cereal has reached since the historic combine of 1891. During the four hours of session a rise of 7½ cents over the opening price was recorded. The Chicago price was 16 cents over Minneapolis and Duluth, 10 cents over New York and 7 cents over St. Louis.

At this price the wheat of an eighty-acre Kansas farm, land value $15 per acre, was worth more than the land itself, the farm equipment and the house and barn. Not a farmer in Minnesota or the Dakotas with 2,400 bushels of wheat, the product of eighty acres last harvest, but what could have sold his grain in Chicago Thursday for more than his land would bring, and have a few hundred dollars to the good.

If the pace of the first few minutes had been maintained during the rest of the session it is probable that kernels of wheat would have sold as high as diamonds at the close. The cereal shot up to $1.05½ at a bound and the holders of big wheat contracts could have disposed of them at this stage without any trouble. When $1.05 was bid for December wheat some of the bulls thought the temperature was getting rather high and dumped a lot of their claims. This action had the effect of easing the market and checking temporarily the efforts of the more aggressive. Ten minutes of comparative quiet reigned in the stormy session, and then the bulls by a coup started the figures their own way again. So complete was the surprise that many of the dealers declared that they expected to see the price sail up to $1.50 before the end of the session.

At $1.06 the explosion of a Krupp gun could not have been heard above the pandemonium. The bulls forced the cereal by fractions of a cent up to $1.07. Here their foemen made a temporary rally and brought another elevator full of grain into their midst. A half hour of deadlock resulted, but the dealers with the horns, metaphorically speaking, concentrated their forces on a weak point in the other ranks and shot the price to $1.09, the high water mark of the day and of six years. Then succeeded the usual slump as the time for the clang of the gong approached and December closed at $1.07.

THE SKAGUAY PASS.

It Is a Trail of Horror and Death Leading to the Klonkike.

The Skaguay Pass, en route to the Klondike region, is thus described by an American miner who has just returned: The Skaguay Pass is a rank fake, advertised by a lot of Shylocks and mountebanks at the town of Skaguay for the purpose of making money out of the deluded people who are persuaded to go that route. What is called the "Skaguay Pass" is no pass at all—it is simply forty-eight miles of mire. I never saw such human suffering in my life as I witnessed

THE SUMMIT OF WHITE PASS.

among the 1,200 people who are now camped in Skaguay Pass. Not five per cent of them will get over and the others are coming back. I found men only twenty miles away from the town, and it had taken them forty days to get that far. Horses get down in the snow and mire and hundreds of animals have their legs broken and must be shot. The bottoms of the canyons are covered with the carcasses of dead animals that have been rolled over the cliffs. There will be much suffering and starving this winter among the people camping in Skaguay Pass. I saw one poor man, who had mortgaged his home in Seattle for $500, gave his wife and children $150 to keep them this winter, and spent $300 for his outfit. He could not get across the fake pass and returned to the town of Skaguay to sell his outfit. The eight or ten outfitters of that town all stand together, and he could get no more than $40 for his outfit. The poor man saw that he had lost his home; and he was broken hearted. I felt sorry for him and gave him $100, and his eloquent thanks were the tears that streamed down his cheeks. This is only one of a hundred like cases, and, for humanity's sake, the Skaguay Pass should be denounced as a fake of unscrupulous swindlers. The town of Skaguay is full of dissolute characters.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

How Much Money Is Saved to the State by Its Natural Gas—Children Burned to Death—Wonderful Escape at Anderson—Medicine Factory Burned.

Natural Gas Figures.

Dr. William Suman of Anderson has completed a statement showing heat unit of natural gas consumption. The present flow of gas from the 2,250 wells now in operation in the gas field is 4,400,000,000 cubic feet per day. Reduced to heat units this, according to Dr. Suman's figures, represents the consumption of 195,400 tons of coal per day. The wells which are attracting so much attention are twenty-two in number and are located near Alexandria. They are wasting 44,000,000 cubic feet per day. This reduced to heat units is equal to 1,950 tons of anthracite coal, valued at $7,656. This is waste only. The oil taken from these wells amounts to 530 barrels per day, or $275, leaving a net loss of $7,380 in allowing the gas to escape. This is for one day and for twenty-two wells. The amount of gas drawn from Indiana wells annually is 1,610,000,000,000 cubic feet, equivalent to 53,496,000 tons of anthracite coal, valued at $213,984,000.

He Escaped Alive.

At Anderson, Volney Moore, a workman at the American Wire Nail Works, while working around the machinery, was caught on a line shaft that was revolving at the rate of sixty revolutions per second. He was whizzing around at a terrible rate, when fellow workmen ran to his rescue and stopped the wheel. It is feared that he received internal injuries.

Medicine Factory Burned.

The immense building of the Sterling Remedy Company of Attica was completely gutted by fire. It was the largest business concern in Attica and employed 150 people. The loss is estimated at $50,000, with but $5,000 insurance.

Children Fatally Burned.

Two orphan children of George Copeland were left alone at Sullivan in the house of their grandmother, Mrs. Eliza Copeland. They played with fire in a grate and were fatally burned. Mrs. Copeland was burned in her efforts to save the little ones. She will recover.

Rev. L. J. Keith of Vincennes has written a letter to the commissioner of pensions at Washington absolutely refusing a pension from the Government, and has made full restitution of all the money received by him, amounting to $495.86.

Near the village of Leesburg, Gates Long, 20 years old, was held up by three men with revolvers. He made no resistance and was robbed of his pocketbook, containing $25, and was stripped of all his clothing except socks and pantaloons. His foot were badly frozen before he reached shelter.

A test just made of sugar beets grown by a number of farmers near Elwood shows that beets can be raised profitably on any farm in Madison and Tipton counties. The test was made at the experimental station at Purdue University and showed the beets to contain 15.3 sugar in juice, purity .87. Hundreds of farmers are preparing to raise beets next season and a corporation company is organizing to build a factory at Elwood. Beet culture will take the place of corn raising.

A decision of far-reaching importance was handed down in the appellate court at Indianapolis, having direct bearing on the pollution of running streams by strawboard and paper mill companies. In the case of the Wabash Paper Company the court held that the company, as well as its individual employes, could be indicted in any county under the nuisance act for throwing refuse into a running stream, and that indictments could be returned in any county through which the refuse floats.

ACCORDANCE.

He who with bold and skillful hand sweeps o'er
The organ keys of some cathedral pile,
Flooding with music vault, and nave, and aisle,
Though on his ear falls but a thunderous roar;
In the composer's lofty motive free,
Knows well that all the temple vast and dim,
Thrills to its base with anthem, psalm and hymn.
True to the changeless laws of harmony.
So he who on these changing chords of life,
With firm, sweet touch plays the Great Master's score
Of truth, and love, and duty evermore,
Knowest, too, that far beyond this roar and strife,
Though he may never hear, in the true time,
These notes must all accord in symphonies sublime.

ANNE L. ROTTA.

An Unfortunate Likeness.

The friendship that existed between Tommy Simpson and Bob Scatterly was a trifle one-sided. Figuratively speaking, Tommy Simpson prostrated himself at Bob Scatterly's feet, and allowed the latter to trample upon him, which he, Scatterly, did without the slightest compunction.

They were both young men, Simpson being the elder by a couple of years, and they both worked in the big drapery establishment of Messrs. Trickett & Chiffon. Simpson was a weak-kneed, under-sized little fellow, with light hair, no eyebrows to speak of and a nervous manner. His hero was of a very different type. He was sturdy and thick-set, and impudence lurked in the corners of his little blue eyes. In his own estimation he was "a deuced smart fellow, dontcherknow; up to snuff and a pinch or two over," etc.

Little Simpson had that admiration for him which a junior often has for the captain of his school, and he constituted himself his "fag"—did his errands, posted his letters and lent him money. They spent their holidays together, appearing for a week at the seaside in yachting caps and peajackets. No one, however, mistook them for sailors. On Sundays, they walked in the park, smoked cigarettes and passed remarks on the girls.

Now, had anyone told Tommy that the day would dawn when he and Bob would pass each other in the street without so much as a nod, he would have scouted the idea with scorn.

Yet so it came to pass.

The cause, of course, was a girl. Her name was Sally—Sally Lowe—and she was employed in the millinery department. She was an attractive damsel—a blonde, small and graceful, with a creamy complexion, a waspish waist and a fondness for flirting.

All the young men at Trickett & Chiffon's became her slave, and risked their situations in reckless fashion by attempting to exchange sentimental nothings with her during business hours. When old Trickett reproved her for carelessness they shook their fists at his broad back and said it was a shame.

Like their fellows, the two friends fell victims to the little milliner's charms. Tommy's passion was a secret one. He would, indeed, have liked to confide with his friend, but he was afraid the latter might treat his confession with ridicule; again, his passion was quite hopeless. Sally laughed quite openly at him.

On the other hand she smiled graciously upon Bob, who wooed her with a boldness that soon won her fickle heart.

In a word, they became engaged.

"She's a nice little thing, is Sally," he observed, condescendingly, when he communicated the intelligence to his henchman; "it's a pity she hasn't a bit of money. I'd always made up my mind to marry a girl with money."

"Her face is her fortune, Bob," the miserable Mr. Simpson murmured sentimentally.

"Ye-es; but her face won't stock us a shop in the High street. I'm a go-ahead chap, Tommy, and if I'd only a bit of tin I'd leave old Trickett's to-morrow and start on my own."

His friend was silent. He, too, had had these dreams; he, too, had thought of a little shop, with Sally and himself snugly ensconced therein.

One Sunday evening, when Tommy was turning out for his now lonely stroll, an arm was thrust familiarly through his.

That arm belonged to Mr. Scatterly.

"I'm off duty for an hour or two," he explained, in answer to his friend's look of inquiry. "Sally's gone to church with her married sister. I'm calling for her later. Come along for a walk in the park; I want to have a bit of a talk with you."

Ten minutes later they were sitting on a bench by the miniature lake, watching the children feed the swans. Mr. Scatterly pushed his hat from his brow, toyed with his cigarette, and dug little holes in the gravel with his malacca.

His companion saw that something was troubling him.

"Nothing wrong, is there, Bobby, old man?" he said at length.

"Why, no—not exactly what you might call wrong," Mr. Scatterly replied slowly; "but the fact is, Tommy, old pal, I'm in a bit of a fix."

Mr. Simpson sucked the head of his stick. His hero had often been in a "bit of a fix" before, and they generally came rather expensive to Tommy.

"It's about Sally," his friend went on. "You see my people are always telling me I'm throwing myself away. She's a nice girl—a very nice girl, but she ain't exactly in our walk of life, and her people—well, we've had them to tea, and their manners are awful!"

"One can't have everything," Mr. Simpson remarked, relieved to find that no call was to be made on his slender purse; "and I'm sure Sally——"

"Oh, Sally's all right! She'd pass as a lady anywhere. There's only one thing she's short of, and that is a bit of cash. As I've said before, I'd always made up my mind to marry money until I met her. I'm a practical sort of chap. There's no blooming sentiment about me. I like a girl with expectations, or a snug little fortune in railways or gasworks. Beauty ain't everything. I'm just beginning to find it out."

"You—you don't mean to say you're thinking of breaking with Sal—with Miss Lowe?" Mr. Simpson asked, in a tremor of agitation.

"Thomas, you've hit," Mr. Scatterly said. "That's just what I am thinking of.

"But—but why?"

"Don't you excite yourself, old man. You keep your hair on and listen to me. I didn't tell you that while my sister Polly was up in Cumberland she made friends with a Miss McKenzie; I didn't tell you either that Miss McKenzie's a bit of an heiress in her way. She lives with an aunt, and this aunt was in the Barkley railway accident last year, and got £2,000 damages. Well, Polly chums up with her, as girls will, writes to her, and asks her over on a visit, and she's coming on Saturday."

"Coming on Saturday, is she?" repeated the bewildered Mr. Simpson.

"Yes, and I'm going to have a cut at the old lady's two thousand."

"But—what about Sally?"

"Why, I mean to have a split with Sally! Oh, I've got it all fixed up! I mean to do it gently, in a way that'll never make her suspect the real facts of the case, and you must help me."

"Me?"

"Yes."

"But I don't quite see——"

"You soon will," responded his friend—"you soon will. You see, it's our Polly's birthday next week, and we're having a little party in the evening. Sally's coming, and one or two other girls; and Miss McKenzie'll be there, of course.

"Now, my little game is this. I shall pretend to be vexed with Sally, and flirt with Miss McK. Naturally, this'll make Sally jealous, for she's a girl of spirit, and she'll try and pay me out by flirting with some one else—with you. Then we shall have a row. I shall refuse to admit myself in the wrong, so will she. There will be a coolness between us, and we shall gradually drift apart. What d'ye think of it, eh?"

Half a dozen young ladies in their Sunday frocks and their hair delicately curled, sat in Mrs. Scatterly's front parlor, looking at the family albums and sustaining an intermittent conversation with half a dozen young men in black coats and white ties, who might have been happy had they known what to do with their hands.

Miss Lowe, looking her best in a white blouse and a blue skirt, sat on the sofa waiting for Bob, who had not yet appeared. Miss Lowe assumed an air of distinct patronage toward her less fortunate companions, and when her lover at length entered she smiled confidently. He, however, went straight to the heiress—a red-haired girl, with a face spotted with many freckles, and in no way remarkable for beauty.

He devoted himself to her until tea was announced, and then he gave her his arm in his most engaging manner.

The fair Sally fumed with anger and poor Tommy, who was allotted to her, found his position anything but enviable. Although he exerted himself to his utmost to shine, his partner paid little heed to his efforts, her attention being concentrated on her lover, who was constantly laughing and whispering with Miss McKenzie.

After tea there was singing. Miss McKenzie played, and Bob turned her music for her. Then there were games, and in every one he chose her for his partner.

Sally noted all this with rising temper. She was not capable of any strong emotion, for she had frittered away her heart in endless flirtations. Nevertheless, she bit her lip ominously.

"I can't think what's the matter with Bob," she remarked at last as if half to herself.

Tommy was silent. It wrung his heart to see her suffer.

"He's not spoken to me once tonight," she went on. "Do you know what's the matter with him, Mr. Simpson?"

"Me. N-no," Tommy stammered, coloring guiltily.

Sally tossed her head.

"Well, I'm sure I don't care," she said. "I didn't know he was so fond of red hair and freckles before. Funny tastes some people have. However, I'm not going to bother myself, and I'll let him see it, too."

She was as good as her word. From that moment she was a changed girl. Her ill-temper was flung aside. She laughed and chattered in the gayest fashion. She rallied Mr. Simpson on his quietness and encouraged him to talk; in a word, she flirted openly with him, and sent him into the seventh heaven of delight.

A few days later a young man, wearing a light suit of a large check pattern, and carrying a Gladstone bag, containing, among other things, a complete nautical costume, took a ticket from London to Margate. The young man was of the "loud" type. He puffed a rank cigar with a "swagger" air, and joked affably with the porters.

The evening following the same young man came back to town. Yet was it the same? He had lost his "swagger" air. His head drooped dejectedly. He no longer joked with the porters, and he let another passenger jostle him with lamblike meekness.

In the street he ran against a little man with a portmanteau who was hurrying to the station. The little man apologized, though he was in no way to blame, and then uttered a startled exclamation.

"Why, Bob!" he cried, "I thought you were at Margate?"

The young man—whose name, by the bye, was Scatterly—betrayed symptoms of discomposure. "I—I've come back rather unexpectedly," he said.

"There's—there's nothing wrong, is there?" the little man—whose name was Simpson—inquired anxiously.

"Yes, there is," his friend answered frankly. "Come along, and I'll tell you all about it."

The two went into the adjoining hotel.

"Tommy," said Mr. Scatterly, in the privacy of the deserted smoking-room "it's all off! The old woman wouldn't take to me at any price. She said if Lizzie married me she wouldn't leave her a sixpence. And all because I'm like a young man she knew who married a girl for her money, and then left her! She says she's sure I should do the same to Lizzy."

Mr. Simpson's nervousness had increased to an alarming degree. He was pale, and the beads of moisture stood on his brow.

"I—I'm very sorry, Bob," he murmured.

"But I shall make it up with Sally again now," Mr. Scatterly remarked.

The little man sprang to his feet.

"What's the matter with you?" his companion demanded testily.

He might well ask; Mr. Simpson's manner was extremely strange.

"I've something to tell you, Bob," he stammered, edging toward the door.

"Well, out with it!" Mr. Scatterly retorted, impatiently.

"It's—it's about Miss Lowe—about Sally," Mr. Simpson went on, his hand grasping the door.

"What about her?"

"What? Why she's—she's my Sally now."

"Your——"

"Yes. While you were away we made it up, an' we were married this morning at the registry office. She's waiting at the station for me now. We're off on our honeymoon."

Then Mr. Scatterly was alone.—John W. Maynall in Answers.

THE TRAMP BOULDER.

Remarkable Evidence of Glacial Influence in New Jersey.

Countless thousands of years ago vast stretches of glacial deposits came sliding across the State of New Jersey, mounted the Palisades, pushed their way across the Hudson River, scoured over Manhattan Island and slid out into the Atlantic Ocean, whither they disintegrated and sank into the deep or perhaps glided on to the other ocean shore.

But in their onward march these glaciers left indestructible evidence of their grinding stride and to-day, all along the Palisades the trap rocks and boulders are worn smooth where the mountains of ice and sand passed over them. In some rocks are deep scratches, all pointing eastward, and showing which way the glacial deposits drifted. There is the evidence, mute but indisputable.

To the careful observer there are numberless other evidences of the presence of glacial influences in the past, but none are more convincing than the tramp boulder that has finally settled down in the woods in the heart of Englewood borough. There it sits, a towering mass of rock weighing perhaps two hundred tons, and resting upon three points which in themselves find a purchase on a flat rock that is part of and common to the character of rock which composes the Palisades. But, strangely enough, and to the wonderment of geologists, the tramp boulder is red sandstone from the Jersey hills twenty-five miles inland, and the pedestal is metamorphite or soft granite.

Around this marvelous monument have grown trees that may, perhaps, be a century old, and they have completely hedged it in; while the rock itself has stood where it stands to-day for thousands of years. On the pedestal, or that part of it which is protected from the action of the elements, can be seen the deep ridges and scars made across the flat surface by the great grinding pressure of the body of ice and sand that passed over it countless years ago when New York was ice and snow clad, and the world was a desolate waste in a state of chaos.

This tramp boulder has caused geologists much wonderment, and is regarded to-day as one of the finest specimens ever left in the wake of a glacier. It is equally astounding as though an explorer should find the hull of a steamboat in the Sahara desert. The only way it could get there would be through some great convulsion that had landed it from the sea to the heart of the inland sands.—New York Journal.

A Great Industry.

Few persons have any idea how great the bicycle industry in this country has become.

Not only has the manufacture of bicycles for the home market reached immense proportions, but our export trade in bicycles is a very big thing.

During the nine months ended September 30, 1897, the exports of passenger cars, carriages and bicycles from the United States amounted in value to $8,374,223, against $4,828,026 during the corresponding time in 1896. Of these exports bicycles and parts of bicycles alone amounted to the value of $5,900,000, or more than double the value of the exportations during the corresponding period last year. These exports are not included in the steel schedule, to which they might well be long. If so included they would mark more distinctly the wide margin between exports and imports of iron and steel products. The imports of these products have already dwindled to a comparatively insignificant figure.

The best bicycles are now made in this country, and it is probable that our enterprising manufacturers will invade the foreign market still further. At present our exportation of bicycles is almost entirely to Great Britain, Germany, France, Canada and Australia, but there are many other countries where bicycles are largely used, which offer a tempting field to our bicycle makers and they will probably build up a big trade in those countries in the early future.—Atlanta Journal.

The Princess of Wales' Favorites.

When upon one occasion the Princess of Wales was induced to write her "confessions" in one of the albums people used to be so fond of keeping for their own and their friends' edification, she recorded her favorite dish as being Yorkshire pudding; her favorite art, millinery; and her favorite occupation, minding her own business.

Kilts.

Between 150,000 and 200,000 kilts are made every year. The kilted regiments of regulars, militia and volunteers number some 17 battalions. As the military kilt is only provided biennially this represents a supply of 7,000 a year.

CASE OF FRANK A. NOVAK.

His Pursuers Traveled 26,000 Miles to Capture and Bring Him Home.

CHARRED REMAINS FOUND IN THE RUINS.

NOVAK TAKEN TO IOWA CITY BY BRYSON.

THE case of Frank A. Novak, convicted at Vinton, Iowa, of murder in the second degree, is one of the most remarkable in the courtannals of the West. The story of the crime, as brought out by evidence at the trial, and of Novak's fight and his subsequent capture at Dawson City, Alaska, almost as soon as he had set foot in the Klondike country, reads more like fiction than fact. The St. Louis Sunday Republic recently contained a full-page illustrated account of the escape of Novak, his arrest in the icy north and his return to the scene of the crime for trial. On the morning of February 3, 1897, the store building of Novak & Jilek at Walford, Iowa, together with the adjoining building, in which Frank A. Novak conducted a private bank, was consumed by fire. Walford is a village, unincorporated, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, situated sixteen miles west of Cedar Rapids, in the eastern portion of Benton County. The fire by which the buildings were destroyed had gained so much headway when discovered by the villagers that it was impossible to extinguish the flames. It was announced that Frank A. Novak was missing and as it had been the custom of Novak, or his partner and brother-in-law, Jilek, to sleep in the store building, it was believed by his friends that he had perished in the flames.

It was discovered that Edward Murray, a young man of the neighborhood, was also missing. Novak's friends said that both had perished in the fire or that Murray had killed and robbed Novak and fled. As motive for Murray's allegel killing of Novak it was stated that Novak had inadvertently left about $500 in his store which he had intended to express to Cedar Rapids to the bank with which he transacted business. It was alleged that Murray knew of the failure to put the money into the envelope with the bank book and deposit slip which were sent to Cedar Rapids on the evening of February 3. Murray's relatives believed that Novak had killed and cremated Murray and burned his own store. As a direct motive for such crime they urged a determination to defraud insurance companies. Novak held regular life and accident policies to the amount of more than $30,000.

A few hours after the fire a charred body was found in the basement. Novak and Murray were of almost identical size and build and identification of the remains might have been impossible but for two circumstances. Bits of cotton shirting were found under the neck and in the arm-pits. These were identified by Mrs. Nellie Shea as pieces of a shirt she had given to her brother.

Novak had had dental work of a peculiar kind done in Cedar Rapids. A description of this work was obtained by newspaper men at work on the case and telegraphed to Walford. The teeth in the skull did not correspond with the description of Novak's teeth, and on these two points the Coroner's jury found the body to be that of Edward Murray. There was a fracture of the skull on the rear portion which had probably been made by the pole of an ax found in the ruins at some distance from the body, and that had caused concussion of the brain. On the body being exhumed by the State the stomach was found to contain poison. When the villagers had sought to extinguish the fire the building was found to be full of gas from a plant installed therein.

FRANK A. NOVAK.

Suspicion of Novak's guilt was strengthened when his father left Walton on an early train on the morning of February 3, and before the remains had been found in the ruins, and went to Cedar Rapids to examine the bank account kept by his son.

On the return of the Coroner's jury a warrant for the arrest of Frank A. Novak on the charge of murder was issued and the State offered $500 for his apprehension. To this sum Benton County added a reward of $200. The case was taken up by the Travelers' Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., in which Novak held a $10,000 policy. A St. Louis detective agency was employed and operatives were set at work on the case.

The first trace of Novak was found at a farmhouse several miles south of Walford, where he had taken breakfast. He was at that place wearing a cap, hunting coat and German socks. He was heard from again at Holbrook, a village farther south, where a local merchant gave him bills for $50 in silver. Novak was carrying a considerable quantity of silver and claimed to be collecting for a liquor house. From Holbrook Novak was taken to Iowa City by one John Bryson, a young man, who was paid $7 for making the drive of twenty-six miles. For several days the track was lost. It was learned later that Novak had bought a ticket from Iowa City to Council Bluffs early on the morning of February 4. From that time the trail, although followed with difficulty at times, was never lost. It was found at Omaha that Novak had bought a coupon ticket to Vancouver, British Columbia, by way of Granger, Wyo., Umatilla Junction, Wash., and Portland, Ore. To this ticket he signed the name Frank Alfred, being his first and second names. The signature was identified at the bank and by various citizens of Cedar Rapids.

On this ticket he traveled to Portland, disposing of the remaining part to a broker. From Portland Novak traveled by rail to Seattle, expecting to embark on the Steamer Alki for Juneau. The Alki had sailed and Novak continued his journey to Port Townsend, Wash., where he arrived in time to take passage on the Alki. To his ticket at this place Novak signed J. A. Smith, the name of a physician who had conducted his physical examinations when making application for insurance policies. It is a peculiar circumstance that a photograph of this ticket introduced in evidence shows that Novak was assigned to room 13.

When it was found that Novak had gone to Juneau with the evident intention of continuing his journey inland, the case was turned over to Detective Charles C. Perrin of San Francisco, formerly marshal of Tucson, and he procured extradition papers on the Governor of Canada. He had already provided himself with requisition papers on the Governor of Alaska, in case the fugitive might be found within that jurisdiction.

The grand jury of Benton County had indicted Novak for murder, arson and attempted fraud on insurance companies, and on a warrant specifying these charges Detective Perrin was prepared to make the arrest. Operative D. L. Clouse at St. Michael's had been warned to be on the watch, lest Novak should attempt to escape by way of the Yukon. Then began a chase which has made C. C. Perrin famous.

Perrin and a hardy Norwegian whom he had hired for the trip traveled through the Chilkoot Pass, built a boat at the head of Lake Linderman, passed Novak and his party, unknowingly, on Lake Bennett and arrived at Dawson City ahead of the fugitive. On July 12, the very day of Novak's arrival at Dawson City, he was placed under arrest. The detective with his prisoner took passage on a Yukon steamer and was joined by Operative Clouse at St. Michael's.

BENTON COUNTY JAIL AT VINTON.

EDWARD MURRAY.

PERRIN ON THE PORTLAND WITH HIS PRISONER, NOVAK.

The Portland, on which they took passage, arrived at Seattle October 29, and on September 2, just seven months from the day of the beginning of his flight from Walford, Novak was locked in a steel cage in the Vinton jail and held to answer to the charge of murder. While engaged in the pursuit and on the return Detective Perrin traveled 26,000 miles.

Novak stated to the detective in explanation of the death of Edward Murray that after a series of unfortunate events following him through his business career, in the shape of unprofitable investments, robberies of his safe and burning of his store and such mishaps, he found that he was reduced to the extremity of procuring another loan of $500, and was preparing to start early on the morning of February 3 to get an uncle of his, living a few miles south of Walford, to indorse a note of that amount so that he could bank it. On the evening of February 2, Ed Murray was in Walford and loaned his team to a couple of young men to take a drive into the country. Murray was drinking and went into the store with Novak, and while the latter was in the basement fixing up the fire in the furnace, Murray got hold of a bottle of whisky which was heavily charged with morphine (left in the store as a dose for burglars in case they ever made another successful entrance), and took a large drink of it. When Novak came out of the basement where he had been fixing the fire, he found what Murray had done, as the bottle was partly empty and Murray in a stupid condition. He then took Murray upstairs and put him to bed, while he (Novak) returned into the body of the store and lay down to read upon the counter under a gas burner. He dropped off to sleep and at some time during the night we up and found the store on fire, the flames coming up the hatchway out of the basement. He then made a couple of efforts to get at Murray to rescue him, but failed, as the whole store was being rapidly enveloped in flames. Starting to run out, he came in contact with his shotgun, standing against the counter, where he had placed it the evening before to have it in readiness as a companion for his intended trip on the morning of the 3d into the country, and picking it up made his escape out of the building. He walked around the consuming building several times, his first intention being to raise an alarm, but realizing that Murray was dead and that life had no allurements for himself in that place or among that people, he turned and fled, resolving to drop into oblivion where he would never be heard of again.

Novak was placed on trial in the District Court of Benton County, Judge Burnham presiding, Tuesday, November 9. The State subpoenaed nearly fifty witnesses, and the defense a large number. County Attorney Tobin was assisted in the prosecution by E. M. Boies of Waterloo, son of ex-Gov. Boies, and Tom Milner of Belle Plaine, was assisted by Judge Ney of Iowa City in the defense.

In contradiction of the confession of Novak the State developed testimony to prove that the body found in the basement on a pile of coal and resting on a mattress supported by a cot must have been in that position when the fire started. The case was in all its details the most sensational ever tried in Iowa.

The jury which heard the case returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter and recommended that Novak be given a term of ten years in prison. When the verdict was first returned fixing the penalty at ten years the judge sent the jury back with orders to remodel the verdict in accordance with his instructions. The second verdict recommended that the prisoner be given ten years, thus giving the trial judge an option in the matter. When Novak was asked if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him, he protested his innocence and said he would not have been satisfied with a verdict of acquittal until the guilty man had been apprehended and punished. As soon as he resumed his seat the judge again called him to his feet and passed the life sentence upon him.

How She Became Noted.

As every one knows, "Lady Audley's Secret" was the novel which lifted Miss Braddon into fame. It may not be so generally known that the author had so little confidence in her work as to bring it out in an obscure serial, Robin Goodfellow.

The story of the story is a romance in itself. Mr. Maxwell had started, in more or less rivalry to Dickens' first periodical, the magazine called Robin Goodfellow. Dr. Mackey was its editor and Lascelles Wraxall was his second in command. There had been some difficulty in regard to the opening novel, in consequence of which the new periodical was on the eve of postponement, a serious contretemps in the face of its extensively advertised date of publication. The day before a decision was necessary Miss Braddon heard of the difficulty and offered to write the story.

"But even if you were strong enough to fill the position," was the publisher's reply, "there is no time."

"How long could you give me?" asked the aspiring authoress.

"Until to-morrow morning."

"At what time to-morrow morning?"

"If the first installment were on my breakfast table to-morrow morning," he replied, indicating by his tone and manner the utter impossibility of the thing, "it would be in time."

The next morning the publisher found upon his breakfast table the opening chapters of "Lady Audley's Secret." Robin Goodfellow did not hit the public. It did not live to finish "Lady Audley," which, indeed, would have remained "forgotten, buried, dead," had Miss Braddon not been able to prevail upon a publisher to bring it out in three-volume form. It then sprang into an instantaneous popularity. The success of the novel was amazing, and probably the critics did no harm to the sale by describing the work as "sensational." More than 1,000,000 copies have been sold.

A Present from George III.

Here is a picture of the fire-tub that George III. presented to his loyal subjects of Shelburne, N. S., in 1795. This was in the days when the town was a populous and thriving place. Half the royalists who left Boston during the revolution built houses in Shelburne and, of course, the king could not see such loyal subjects suffer for lack of proper protection against fire. The tub is still in a fair state of preservation.

Electricity in America.

According to statistics the number of yearly telephonic conversations in the United States is 75,000,000; of telegraphic messages, 65,000,000; of arc lights, 1,000,000; of incandescent lights, 15,000,000. There are several hundred thousand electric motors and 1,000 electric railways. It is estimated that to 2,500,000 persons in this country electricity contributes a means of livelihood.

CORN ALONE.

Hundreds of Loads Received Daily at Antwerp. O.

J. C. Lochner, wife and son returned Monday from a pleasant visit with relatives at Antwerp, O. The population of that city is only a little over 1000, but it is the busiest place we have ever visited. Then too they put on more city airs. The town is managed under city government and has a mayor, council, and the various committees An electric light plant is owned by a private corporation and her streets are light with fourteen arc lights. Then the company have the entire support of every business man and every store room and office are lighted with are or incandescent lights. At present there are fourteen commercial arc lights in operation. These cost in business house $4 a month and the churches pay $20 a year. Incandescents cost 40 cents a month. The plant is operated in connection with the elevator, and corn cobs are used exclusively as fuel.

Buying and shipping corn is now one of her leading industries. There are two elevators located near the Wabash track and both are kept busy. The farmers in Paulding county plant hundreds of acres as the soil yields corn better than anything else. It is brought from the fields and they receive 31 cents a hundred pounds. At the elevators it is shelled and then shipped. As high as 75 loads of corn have been received in one day at one elevator. It will thus be seen that the raising of corn has been a profitable business for the farmers of that vicinity. They need not go to the trouble of cribbing their corn, but haul it direct to the market. From three to five cars of live hogs are also shipped weekly from Antwerp.

THE HOOK TRIAL.

Tuesday's Daily.

Bert Robbins was over at Columbia City yesterday as a witness in the Hook case. The case is going on under Judge Adair. James H. Rose of this place, is assisting the Prosecutor over there, or rather as is usual, doing it all. It would be a good idea to give the prosecutor a salary that would induce an attorney who could do the work, to take the office. Albert Robbins went over there today, being called there as a witness for both sides. The defense is conducted by J. W. Baxter, of Auburn, and T. R. Marshall, of Columbia City.

John W. Baxter was home over night, returning to Columbia City on the 9 a. m. Wabash train. He came back to secure new evidence in the matter. he being of the defense. Yesterday the state had concluded all its evidence and "rested". The defense was ready to proceed, but after talking the matter over Hook's attorneys feeling that the state had not made out a case, made a motion that the Judge instruct the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty. But Judge Adair hesitated to do this as it was a very unusual motion, and really took the matter entirely out of the hands of jury. So, after studying it over, he overruled the motion. So the defense are bringing in their evidence today. Albert Robbins went over again this morning, it being necessary to bring some items relating to Hook's dealings with the Farmers Bank. This was done in order to assist in clearing up the doubt as to whether it is Hook's handwriting or that of someone else, on the order over which the trial is had. Other witnesses will be called, but the trial is not likely to be a long one.

THE W. R. C. SOCIAL.

The ladies of the W. R. C. gave a splendid supper last evening though the attendance was not large. It was followed by the usual good visit and social time. The proceeds go to benefit of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home at Knightstown and to the Feeble Minded Asylum at Fort Wayne. Both are worthy purposes, and we would have been pleased to see the attendance and patronage a great deal larger.

I'LL BUY YOUR DOG

Word had scarcely been scattered broadcast that Auburn would put in waterworks till one John J. Hainesworth, of Indianapolis, a civil, engineer, was here and wanted the job and he came several times, usually on the evenings when the council would meet He admired Dr. Fitch's fine dog and said to Doc, that if he would use his influence in getting him the job he would "buy his dog." Of course Dr. Fitch could not be bought.

The COURIER at the time made mention of the liberality of Mr. Hainesworth Now comes a special from Valparaiso, which shows the man up to be a professional "skinner." It says:

"The scheme, is to unload the Valparaiso water plant, worth about $60,000, upon the city for the enormous sum of $330,000, to be paid in thirty annual installments of $11,000 each.

According to John Hainsworth an engineer of Indianapolis, who has been quietly working on members of city council for the past month, the syndicate which he represents has an option on the plant. If the city council will pass an ordinance, to be prepared by him, at a special meeting to be held next Thursday night, he will turn over the plant, to be operated by the city, on the terms named.

The plant is owned by the Michigan Wooden Pipe Line Company, is the Holly system (wood pipes), and is bonded for $55,000. It is thirteen years old and the pipes are rapidly decaying, some of them giving way whenever fire pressure is put on. Practical waterworks men claim that a better system, with iron pipes, can be put in now for $45,000.

The citizens are greatly alarmed, and a call was issued today for all taxpayers to turn out next Thursday evening to prevent the steal, which Mr. Hainsworth pronounces practically a Christmas present to the city, enabling it to secure waterworks on easy payments."

NO OPERA.

The Comic Opera Company that was to be here Saturday evening, will not appear. Mr. Henry today received a letter from the manager, now at Peoria, Ill., stating that he could not come, as he had been compelled to stop in that city and reorganize his company. So they had to cancel all dates near this one, and will not be here. It will disappoint a good many lovers of opera, as the company is considered an excellent one.

SAME LIKE McGINTY

It has but a short time since Spain had constructed at an English shipbuilding establishment a huge "floating dock," to be used in cleaning and repairing her warships in Cuban waters. The big box, being water tight was taken in tow by steam vessels and towed all the way across the Atlantic to Cuba. It floated all right and they had no trouble with it. It was a new feature in naval affairs and created a good deal of talk. The papers spoke of it as a marvelous thing, and gave pictures of it. Spain thought she had taken a forward step in naval warfare. She would now have a dock for use in Cuba, a thing she had not before. But now she is in the dumps. The big box was towed safely into the capacious harbor of Havana and securely anchored. Of course no one was left in charge of it, as it was not made for men to stay in. But there was no thought of trouble, yet in a day or two it was noticed that it did not appear as high as when it first anchored. Next day it was to be seen that it had settled decidedly into the water, and in a day or so more it was "out of sight." It had sunk to the bottom of the bay.

The unexpected disappearance of the dock has caused a great deal of trouble in their navy department and the palace of the captain general, and has also been productive of much amusement among the friends of America.

The Spanish naval engineers cry loud that fraud was perpetrated in England, but others say that the dock came from England in good condition and that something fatal was done to it in Havana. Others suspect that the trouble has been caused by "Cuban conspirators." It is said that the whole business of the dock has cost the Spanish government about $1,000,000.

COMMISSIONERS.

The Board met Monday, with all present. Mr. Gunsenhouser was able to come over, though his injured foot is not able to be used any yet. It was dislocated at the ankle and one of the bones broken at the joint. It will take some time before he is completely sound again. But he can come to the sessions of the Board on his crutches, and once there is all right. Monday and Tuesday were the odds and ends of business to be done, and on Wednesday, the matter of the W. A. Danneis ditch was set. The remonstrants have for their attorneys, E. D. Hartman C. E. Emanuel and J. F. Shoeman; Mr. Dannels' attorneys are Baxter & Brown.

Among the matters that took time Tuesday, was a difficulty in getting Sheriff Stroh's accounts clear. It appears he had put his "O. K," to some bills the commissioners could not understand. They could not see that he had received such goods. It was after a good deal of discussion untangled so they could understand it, and the matter was settled in a satisfactory way to all. It however emphasizes the need for every officer to keep his accounts carefully.

It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For ale by Robbins & McCord. tf —Efforts are being made to enforce the law in regard to needless waste of gas in our gas belt. It should have been enforced long ago. What is the use of having good laws if no one enforces them?

—Mrs. M. B. Ford, Ruddell's, Ill., suffered eight years from dyspepsia and chronic constipation and was finaly cured by using DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills for all stomach and liver troubles. For Sale by H. B. McCord —Strikes in the factories and mines are starting up again after a quiet of a few weeks. The coal mines of Brazil, Ind., and the glass factories in the Indiana gas belt are having lots of trouble now, and many hundreds of men are out of employment.

—Mrs. Stark, Pleasant Ridge, O.. says "After two doctors gave up my boy to die, I saved him from croup by using One Minute Cough Cure." It is the quickest and most certain remedy for coughs, colds and all throat and lung troubles. For sale by H. B. McCord.

—F. G. Miltz, of Napoleon, Ohio, has been here several days, advertising and showing a very useful patent of his. It is a jack for lifting a buggy so as to take off the wheel to oil it. And he has also a combinaton wrench to go with the lifting jack.

—Miss Allie Hughes, Norfolk, Va., was frightfully burned on the face and neck Pain was instantly relieved by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, which healed the injury without leaving a scar. It is the famous pile remedy. By H. B. McCord.

Friday's Daily.

—The crazy man who was sent to to jail is quite noisy. Cards have been sent all over the state but no one seems to know him.

—Dr. Baxter had a patient yesterday who had a hole knocked in his nose which required seven stitches. He was loading logs and one of skids hit him. He did not learn his name.

—The 13 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Norway, corner 5th and Cedarsts is quite sick and has been for about a week. He is suffering with something like kidney trouble. Dr Baxter is attending him.

—Geo. Link will move in about a week with his faimily to Princeton, Ind., where he will buy timber for A. B. Nickey & Son. He has disposed of nearly all of the timber here of the company.

—Mrs. A. P. Hartle, mother of Mrs. L V. Yingling, with her sister, Mrs. Lovina Parker of DesMoinse, Iowa and daughter, Mrs. Maggie Walker, of Washington, D. C., visited with the family of L. V. Yingling yesterday. Today they are at the home of Mrs. Hartle.

—P. D. West says he is now an "old attorney," having got around the second time to his first client. After his course at law school had closed, he came home and in a day or two a wealthy Noble county farmer named Galloway, came and employed him to help in a case against one of his, Galloway's tenants. Mr. West won the case. Now Galloway is dead and the Auburn attorney has the job of helping to settle up the large estate for the benefit of the widow and children. So he is "once around" in his profession.

—Indianapolis papers bring news that the "Hugg law" has been declared unconstitutional. That don't concern people outside of that city. But up this way there is an unwritten "hug" law, spelled with one "g," that has always been very popular and as far as we are informed it is constitutional —The manager of the Merchant of Venice Company last night paid the Auburn people a high compliment. He admired the excellent attention given and noticed that all were able to catch the fine, though difficult points, of the drama. He said they must have studied it, to be such good critics. He was also, agreeably surprised at the attendance on such a bad night.

—Robert Showers is one of our prompt paying patrons. He may not always have the money, but he always has something to make a turn on, that we can use, about the time his subscription comes due. Today it was a half dozen of his fine brooms. As the COURIER office prides itself on it neatness, it takes about that number to do us a year.

—Commissioner Shoemaker went early last evening as he had to drive up to the home farm in Smithfiled to see his son Scott Shoemaker, who lives there, and is seriously ill. He has been sick for some time. This morning on his return, he reported Scott in a very uncertain condition. It is not Known exactly the character of his sickress, but it is supposed to be some internal injury.

—A great many people are influenced by what others do, and that is one of the reasons why so many take Simmons Liver Regulator. "I was suffering greatly from Chills and Fever and the more quinine I took the worse I felt. I was told of Simmens Liver Regulator by a friend in Arkansas, and I didn't need to take much of it before I was entirely relieved."—Byron Bradley, Tallahassee, Fla.

—Miss Christine Bradley who has been chosen to christen the new war ship Kentucky, is a student in Washington College, and daughter of the present governor of the state. The former secretary of the navy, Mr. Herbert had selected a Miss Richardson, but the new secretary, Mr. Long, went back on that bargain. Hence the change, and quite a little quarrel.

—Editor Williamson of the Columbia City Mail is postmaster over there and rented rooms in the court house. Now he complains that Judge Adair has ordered him to vacate a part of the rooms. We apprehend that at least a part of the trouble arises from the editor's own disposition, which is always of what he himself would call the "Col. Bill Snort" kind.

—Hon. H. R. Belknap, who used to be a clerk in the B. & O. shops at Garrett, but now a member of congress from a Chicago district, is now chairman of the sub-committee or army desertions,

Monday's Daily

—Mrs. I. M, Johnson a little better this morning.

—Chas. Kinsey and wife are entertaining their uncle Joseph Kirk from Kansas.

—Judge McClellan is getting along nicely, being greatly improved

—Dr. M. W. Johnston, and wife of Garrett, were guests Sunday of Dr. S. B. Johnston and wife of this place.

—Born to Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Bennigan, a girl. Dr. Stamets in attendance.

—Isaac Miller of Hudson, is one of the lucky pensioners who is reported to have an increase.

—Major Kuhlman and Capt. Lahnum go to Indianapolis tomorrow to attend officers' school of the State Militia.

—The Daily Post of Columbia City, clips an old saying that there are signs of coming war, in the increasing number of rats over the country. Auburn has a better and surer sign. For the past year or more, about ninetenths of the children born in Auburn have been boys. As a sign, that beats all your rats and locusts.

—Mrs. A. J. Ralston and her cousin Miss Clara Hultz go to Angola today noon to visit a few days with Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Scott. Miss Hultz goes from there to visit relatives in Michigan after which she will return to her home at Plymouth, Ohio.

—The Presbyterian ladies succeed very well with their effort last week in spite of the very unfavorable weather. The bazar and market together netted them over $50 and the supper Friday evening cleared over $20, more, making a total of about $75. And they will get a little more from the sale of a few articles, not yet called for. Altogether, they are well pleased.

—A prisoner in the Fort Wayne jail got blind drunk the other day. He claimed a visiting friend brought him in a bottle of exhilarating stuff. That is as bad as the Auburn jail in which it was found the inmates had revolvers, saws, files, razors etc, and put in several nights of their time sawing off the jail bars. The COURIER is opposed on principle, to allowing prisoners to run a saloon or a hardware store in jails.

—Mrs. Mary Bird, Harrisburg, Pa., says "My child is worth millions to me; yet I would have lost her by croup had I not invested twenty-five cents in a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure." It cures coughs, colds, and all throat and lung troubles For sale by H. B. McCord.

—John G. Ashley was a caller at the COURIER sanctum this morning. He is looking to get the job of putting down the test well for the water works. His firm put down the wells in Garrett, and being people of experience, and he an old Auburn boy, we hope to see them get it.

—Fine Insurance, Leading Agency
WALTER C. HARTMAN

—M. E. Garrett has been sick a few days, but is able to be out today.

—Editor Downey of the Kendallville News started a new daily at that place Monday called the "Kendallville Daily Journal." It is a good little paper and full of live local matter. Whether a town of the size of Kendallville can support two dailies is a question we have no means of deciding. We hope it may prove a paying venture.

—New things in ladies' purses at Davenport's.

—Miss Alza Reynolds is to be married this evening at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reynolds in Butler, to Mr. Ira Goode of San Francisco, Cal. Mrs. Priscilla Barclay of this place, will be a guest at the wedding. Miss Reynolds is well known to the young people of Auburn, all of whom will wish her all possible happiness.

Davenport's line of dolls is complete and at unheard of prices.

—J. G. Ashley and Robert Spice of Ft. Wayne, came up here Monday and waited to attend the special meeting of the town council last evening, to see about putting down a test well, as a first step in the water works matter.

—Davenport, the druggist, has just opened up his line of holiday goods, and it will pay anyone to stop and see the fine display. When it comes to really elegant, artistic creations, that is the place to find them.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

THE TREND OF POLITICS.

It is as plain as the nose on a man's face that the trend of party politics is toward Democracy. Every municipal and State election since the election of McKinley has shown big Democratic gains; more than the gains which are always made by the outs after a successful campaign by the ins.

This country is by inclination and interest Democratic. As long as the Republican party is in close touch with the great middle class of our republic, so long it is on the right track, but the moment it joins hands with the Mark Hannas, the Tom Platts, the Matt Quays, the Andrew Carnegies and that stripe of patriots, it parts company with its principles and laughs defiance at government by the people.

The Republican party won in 1896 on account of a terrible panic for which no party was responsible. It had been a thousand times better if the Democratic party had lost in 1892, for the panic was due just the same and no power, save providential, could have stayed the avalanche of financial disaster. To prove that the panic would have been upon us just the same if Harrison had been re-elected, we need only to cite present conditions, which are not much better than a year or two years ago. If the Republicans had the Aladdin lamp that would build castles and golden palaces in 1893, why do they not rub the lamp late in the fall of 1897? If it was Democratic incompetency and stupidity that led the country into a slough of despond in 1892, why does not the Republican party say the magic word that will transform an Egyptian famine into a Canaan flowing with milk and honey?

It is not in the power of any political party to say to panicky times, "so far shalt thou come and no farther." Neither has any party the right in decency and fairness to lay the blame of unpropitious financial conditions upon the opposite party.

The Democratic party failed in 1896 because of the panic long continued, but there were other reasons. It had to answer for an emasculated tariff bill, which had been pruned and trimmed and remodeled till its own creators did not know it from a last year's bird's nest. It was shamefully disfigured; so much so, indeed, that Grover Cleveland refused to sign it. The men who by their narrowness, their treachery and political villainy brought about that result are, bless the Lord, being rapidly retired to private life, and they go to endless oblivion as the victims entered Dante's Inferno, knowing that it is "abandon hope, all ye who enter here." There is no weeping or commiseration over their downfall.

The Democratic party is being purged of its self-seekers, of its Gormans, Hills, Murphys, McPhersons and like ilk. The Democratic party is being rehabilitated after this house-cleaning. On the ruins of the old party is being erected a new party, grander, nobler and better than before. The trend is towards Democracy. Republican promises are not being redeemed.—Washington, Ia., Democrat.

Jekyll-Hyde Tariff.

Thomas B. Reed has made a remarkable discovery. He has found out that the Dingley tariff bill is a Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde affair.

Just now it is unfortunately true that the Mr. Hyde nature of the tariff is manifesting itself, but later on the good Dr. Jekyll will appear and the wicked Mr. Hyde will leave the stage of operations. By some peculiar automatic change this Dingley deficiency producer will become a surplus producer, and everything will be lovely in the Republican camp.

When Dingley was busy preparing his bill he used the argument that the Democratic deficit caused the bond issue, and that the Republican tariff would cure all such evils. The result is now a deficit of nearly $50,000,000, with good prospects of doubling that amount in the next six months.

The New York Evening Post is not so optimistic as the rotund Reed, and announces brusquely that "currency reform in the presence of a deficit is impossible." If this is true, what are the Republicans going to do about it?

Will they postpone currency reform until the benevolent side of the Jekyll-Hyde tariff puts in an appearance, or will they admit that Mr. Hyde has gained a permanent ascendency and tackle the tariff question a second time?

Things are badly mixed, and the Republicans must either confess that their tariff is a failure or stubbornly blunder along with it until a deficit of $100,000,000 frightens them into making a revision.

Thurston's Blatherskite Talk.

To intimate that every man who does not vote the Republican ticket is an anarchist in disguise does no particular good and may do some harm. Senator Thurston himself knows that the great body of the American people of whatever party are decent, law-abiding citizens. To state otherwise is to insult the intelligence of his audience. Such blatherskite talk probably loses more votes in the long run than almost any other kind of tactics that the Nebraska Senator might follow. As a simple matter of winning votes, if for no other reason, it pays to be fair in American politics.—Boston Advertiser.

Haymaking Time for Republicans.

There can be no hope of bringing the revenue and appropriations together by economy for two reasons. The appropriations for this fiscal year are already made and the estimates indicate a deficit approaching $70,000,000. The appropriations for the next fiscal year are little likely to be lessened by a party which sees on every hand evidences that its complete control over the Government is shortly to be wrested from it. The Republicans can be expected to make hay for themselves while the sun shines.—New York Journal.

Trouble Ahead for Mr. Gage.

If currency reform is not to be pressed upon this Congress with the whole influence of the administration, in the hope that the next Congress will be better disposed, the Secretary of the Treasury will be apt to find himself confronted by a hostile Congress on the first Monday in December, 1899. The political future does not belong to a party unconscious of its aim or having an aim and wanting in the courage to pursue it.—Philadelphia Record.

Facts About Imports.

A correspondent writes to the effect that articles claiming the Dingley bill is a success in producing revenue are published in certain weekly papers of Chicago, and these journals are "scattered broadcast, free, gratis, for nothing."

In his letter this correspondent asks for the facts. The figures, taken from official reports, have been published in these columns from time to time, and they demonstrate that the Dingley bill is a failure as a revenue getter. All statements to the contrary are in defiance of facts.

The Dingley tariff has produced a deficit up to date of $46,581,120. Every month of the life of this measure from the date of its passage, July 24, 1897, has produced a deficit. The plain, undisputed figures are as follows:

July	$11,073,545
August	14,564,432
September	3,435,718
October	9,310,097
November	8,572,109

In the face of this showing it is simply falsehood for Republican politicians to send out reports claiming that "the imports under the new tariff law compare favorably with those of a year ago."

The deficit for the last fiscal year ending July 30, 1897, was only $18,052,254, and the deficit for the four months of the present fiscal year is $46,581,120, nearly three times as large as the total deficit for twelve months last year. Does this showing of imports "compare favorably with that of a year ago?"

The Dingley tariff is a wretched failure, and the Republicans might as well admit this fact first as last. The people cannot be fooled all the time, and with such facts as those given above to enlighten them they cannot be fooled at all.—Chicago Dispatch.

Cannot Deny These.

It cannot be successfully denied: That, the Sherman act of 1873 having deprived silver of its function as a standard of value, the whole burden of the functions of primary money was thereby devolved on gold alone, thereby largely enhancing its purchasing power with respect to all commodities, including silver. This is clearly shown in the article entitled "Silver," in Volume 22, Encyclopedia Britannica, page 81.

It cannot be denied that at the very time that silver was degraded by being deprived of its function as a standard of value, the silver in a silver dollar was worth 3 cents more than the gold in a gold dollar. It was demonetized then because it was too dear. It must be kept demonetized now because it is too cheap!

It cannot be denied that so far from silver having decreased in value on account of its increased production and not from its demonetization, as claimed by the advocates of gold monometallism, carefully prepared tables of the world's production of gold and silver show that at no time in the history of the world has the output of silver as compared with gold been so small as it has been since 1852.

It cannot be denied that from the discovery of America the output of the two metals was thirty-one per cent. of gold to sixty-nine per cent. of silver. That from 1801 to 1840 the output of silver to gold was more than $71 in silver to $28 in gold, and yet during all the time above referred to the principles of bimetallism kept them upon the average commercial ratio of less than 16 to 1. That at present the comparative output is about $20 in silver to $15 in gold; so that it is perfectly evident that the widening in the difference of the commercial ratio between them has not been due to any increase in the output of silver.—Bimetallist.

Tariff Dilemmas.

The Republicans will discover, if they have not yet reached that stage of enlightenment, that the Dingley tariff dilemma has two horns. Just now the tariff tinkers are squirming on the horn of a deficit, but, with an optimism worthy of Mark Tapley, they laugh at the suggestion that they are hurt, and assert that after December the deficit of $60,000,000 will be made up by increased importations and prosperity will dawn. Is that so?

For the sake of cheerful amenity let the assertion be accepted. What, then, have the Republicans gained? To be sure, they have cured the deficit, but at what expense? American manufacturers were promised a glorious dawn of prosperity after the Dingley bill had performed its perfect work. Will an increase of importations so enormous as to yield an extra revenue of $60,000,000 be considered a blessing by the manufacturers of this country? W. S. Gilbert's paradox in "The Pirates of Penzance" is nothing compared with the delightful paradox perpetrated by Dingley, which promises a tremendous boom in the way of importations and a sunburst of prosperity to home manufacturers as coincidentally beneficial results.

Protection which does not protect is one horn of the dilemma. Protection which produces a deficit is another horn. If the Republicans escape the one they will be pierced on the other.

Stilling the Clamor for Office.

One of the greatest benefits of civil service reform is its effect in putting a stop to the clamor for office, and every position placed upon the classified list is one temptation removed from hundreds of persons who think a Government office, no matter what the work or salary, is the one thing above all others to be desired.—Cleveland Leader.

Ireland has the most equable climate of any country in Europe.

THE PEOPLE'S MONEY

English Bimetallists.

English gold advocating newspapers are not any more honest than those of the United States. They congratulate the people on the fact that a "death blow has been struck to the bimetallic craze" in the face of facts which prove the contrary. The election of a bimetallist to Parliament from Lancashire has already been noted here, but a brief resume of the platform on which he was elected will throw some light on the situation.

The man who was chosen answered in the affirmative the following questions:

1. Are you in favor of a return to the monetary system under which the trade of the world was practically conducted until the year 1873, the ratio between gold and silver money to be fixed by international agreement?

2. Are you, if not prepared to support the adoption of the bimetallic standard for the United Kingdom, prepared to recommend, as our contribution to an international agreement with France and the United States, (a) the opening of the Indian mints to the free coinage of silver; (b) the holding of one-fifth of the reserve of the Bank of England in silver, as is allowed by the bank charter; (c) the abolition of the half sovereign; (d) the increase of the amount for which silver is legal tender in the United Kingdom?

3. Are you prepared to insist on the government keeping their pledges to do all in their power to secure a stable monetary par of exchange?

4. If elected, will you vote in favor of the United Kingdom joining in an international conference for the purpose of restoring the joint use of gold and silver as full legal tender money?

The efforts of the subsidized English press to show that a "death blow has been struck to bimetallism" are quite as ludicrous, in view of the facts presented, as like efforts on the part of the gold advocating press in the United States.

"Too Much Money."

The gold clique has discovered what is the matter with the currency system of the United States. There is "too much money in circulation."

The wage earners in the coal pits who average $7.50 a month will at once see the wisdom of this announcement, and will join heart and soul in giving their support to a plan for reducing this pernicious plethora. There can be no doubt in the minds of these men that there is altogether too much money floating around loose.

Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright is an optimist on the question of wages, and yet, when his statistics are sifted down to correct figures, it appears that the average annual wage per man in the United States is $247. Those who earn this magnificent sum and support a large family will at once joyfully accept the theory that money is altogether too plentiful.

The Secretary of the Treasury is deeply impressed by the "menace to the public credit occasioned by the continued use of a large volume of demand liabilities," and he proposes to strengthen the credit of the nation "by an unimportant reduction in the objectionable form of liabilities."

By all means let there be a contraction of the currency. As the National Bimetallist truly remarks: "We knew all the time something was wrong, but we never dreamed that the great monetary stringency of present years was caused by a superabundance of money."

Silver in 1900.

The decision of the English cabinet not to comply with any of the requests of the bimetalic commission makes the United States the battleground for silver.

Academic discussion of the money question has its value, but no reform can result until political action is taken. The issue is now made for the campaign of 1900, and the contest is to be a struggle between gold and silver. The hypocrisy of the Republican party in its pretended advocacy of international bimetallism has at last been fully exposed. No longer can the friends of free silver be diverted from their object by false promises and futile hopes.

The Secretary of the Treasury even goes so far as to suggest selling the silver bullion now in the treasury vaults. The price of bullion has been hammered down by the gold men, aided by the superintendent of the mint, and millions of the people's money are to be sacrificed, if the gold clique is allowed to have its way.

Fortunately, the Senate is so constituted that such an outrage upon the people cannot be perpetrated, but herculean efforts will be made by the Republicans to change the complexion of the upper house so as to forge the fetters of gold on the hands of industry. The great political battle will be continued next year, and the final struggle will come in 1900. Silver men should be on the alert. The army of gold is determined, desperate and dangerous.

Rag Money.

What is the "endless chain" which the gold clique talk so much about? It is a creation of the money power. It exists because the advocates of gold, contrary to the law, choose to decide that the paper currency of this country, made redeemable in "coin," is only redeemable in gold.

The destruction of the greenbacks will do one of three things. It will contract the currency enormously; it will substitute irredeemable bank notes for greenbacks; or, if the bank notes are made redeemable in gold, it will simply make the endless chain a legal institution, and the currency will be in a worse condition than ever. The only way to break the endless chain on the theory that the gold clique is to issue flat paper money. What is the flat money of the banks worth? No more than the office furniture of the banks which issue such money is worth. Truly this is "sound money" with a vengeance.

The Russian Government has purchased the great Sebastopol shipbuilding yards for 1,900,000 roubles.

CRAZE FOR NOVELTY.

MANY OLD GARMENTS ARE NOW IN USE.

Modifications of the Blouse—Waist Coverings that Appear to Keep the Wearer Warm, but Do Not Do So—Three Very Fashionable Hats.

What to Wear.

New York correspondence:

GOOD authorities begin to whisper that blouses have had their day, so if you can discover anything newer on the horizon of fashion, by all means cut new cloth according to the newer model. But that discovery is not an easy one to make and feel sure of, because it looks now as if blouses were good for at least an entire season more, and as if women would then be sorry to give them up. Just now they are being made more and more elaborate.

The ever popular shooting jacket, with its many pleats front and back, makes a charming blouse design when cunningly modified. Rich lines of embroidery are made to represent the pleats, the belt seems to produce the blouse fullness above the waist line, which is really a matter of fit and cut, while below the regulation close clinging blouse skirts are modified to carry out the idea of the pleats. A garment of this sort is shown herewith. Its sleeves were dark brown cloth to match the dress skirt, made bands of black soutache embroidery almost covered the body portion, and the slashed basque, each tab of which had its band of embroidery, was edged with heavy black cord.

Whatever women are wearing beneath their street bodices, it must be warm. Perhaps chamois linings are more common than we suspect; anyway furs are being put off later than ever this year, and women seem so much in love with bodice styles that they have not the heart to hide their new dresses under big cloaks. It must be confessed that many of us would rather not wear a fur than wear one that is not cut according to this year's model. We put little cape affairs over our shoulders that do not even pretend to add to the warmth of what we are wearing, or we cut our blouse bodice into the semblance of a jacket, so we can seem to have on "something that goes over," while really and truly it is just a bodice and that only. Two examples of this kind of contriving appear in the next picture, and either is sufficiently stylish to offset, to many women, even risks of pneumonia. The first was stone gray broadcloth, pink taffeta lining basque and skirt. The cape effect, though the dominant ornamentation, was the merest pretense when considered as a protection against cold, consisting merely of wide revers and draped bretelles of the goods freely embroidered with dark gray braid. The other fake—the counterfeit of a jacket—was warmer than it looked, for it opened over a green velvet vest that matched the dress skirt for something pretty. Of course, the oddity must be in touch with current styles, but that much having been accomplished, the more unusual it is the more it will please its purchaser. Where this craze for novelty will end it takes a brave prophet to tell. A quiet, harmless and well fitting bodice is covered by some strange surplice-fichu affair, all braid and zig-zag, and behold! the bodice takes its entire character from the addition. The original cloth of which the gown was made is unsuspected—what matter, anything to break the monotony. It was a regular smash of it in this model, which was gray broadcloth, soutache in zig-zags of plain lines and curlicue border covering its bodice.

The gown in the middle of this second large picture was another product of the rush for oddities. It had a yoke effect so striking as to be more in keeping with ballroom than the street. The sides of its front were alike, but that was too conventional a start, so the yoke effect on the skirt was permitted to go its own original way. It was composed of greenish gray faille, the trimming being black chantilly lace strips edged with black jet bands.

After such models a little matter like fastening to one side seems a very original and restful expedient. This last bodice was put here chiefly to show that the blouse need not have skirts. The one just described did not have them, but that was a princess counterfeit, and the last coctume of the other pictured row of three had bodice and skirt and bodice closely matched by their trimming. This rig, which was in a nut brown novelty suiting, had an entirely plain skirt, yet its blouse ended frankly at the belt. Its trimming consisted of narrow braid and a brown satin frill, straps of the goods closing it. It is pleasant to know that skirts to the blouse are no longer imperative.

There is really very little to be said about bodices, so thoroughly does the blouse idea dominate them. The Russian blouse should be considered the source of all the countless blouse modifications, but modifications are galore. With skirts it should be noticed that the effort to trim them still has force. It seems to be accepted now, too, that it is well to carry out the trimming of the bodice in a prolongation on the skirt. The costume last described was on this general order, but the one at the right of it was a more characteristic type. This bodice was ornamented with bands of embroidery, crossing over the shoulders and narrowing to the belt, a continuation of these same bands appearing below the belt on the skirt. Gray was the color of its cloth, lighter and darker gray appearing in the embroidery, whose bands enclosed gray velvet.

BLOUSES THAT MAKE PRETENCE OF WARMTH.

RESULTS OF THE STRIFE AFTER NOVELTY.

Alaskan Indian Trick.

In one of the Alaskan religious ceremonies a big wooden wedge is driven, apparently, through a woman's head, from one temple to the other. The effect is exceedingly realistic, the woman's eyes seeming to start from the sockets and hang down on her cheeks, while blood flows in streams. As a matter of fact, the wedge shown the audience is secretly exchanged for one consisting of two parts attached to a wooden band, covered with hair, that is slipped over the head. Thus it seems as if the butt end stuck out on one side, the point having passed through the skull. At the same time bladders containing blood, attached to the band, are punctured and the blood flows down the woman's face. The wedge being removed, she is all right again, and the phenomenon passes for a quasi-religious miracle. The outstarting eyes are the eyes of a seal, lowered over the forehead.—Spokane Review.

panel. Its goods was green cloth, looped soutache giving the liberal supply of edging.

The three hats in this picture are as representative of current millinery as any three hats could be, for the styles in headwear are very diverse. One thing worth noting is that the very large hat is not seen in actual wear half as often as it is in the millinery windows. The medium hat, with straight brim and a trimming of ribbons and plumes, is the usual thing.

Some of the new bodices that dressmakers show indicate that women are quite as anxious for something odd as

"TIP" FROM EUGENIE.

IT WAS THE NUCLEUS OF DR. EVANS' VAST FORTUNE.

How the American Dentist Acquired Immense Wealth by a Hint from the French Empress—A Strange Bit of History.

Dr. Thomas W. Evans, an American dentist who had lived for many years in Paris, died the other day at his home in the French capital, leaving an enormous fortune, valued at $35,000,000. In addition to the amassing of this great amount of wealth, Dr. Evans had long been an international character by reason of the part which he played in the escape of Empress Eugenie from the Parisian mob after the abdication and capture of Napoleon.

Dr. Evans had completed his memoirs just previous to his death, and that incident will no doubt be fully described by his own pen. It is extremely doubtful, however, if he has permitted himself to dwell upon the secret of his wealth, or, rather, upon the incident which started him upon the path to fortune.

Dr. Evans received the nucleus of his fortune from a "tip" given by no less a person than the Empress Eugenie herself. Of course he enjoyed a most lucrative practice, and he has placed crowns in the mouths of a great many persons who also wore crowns upon their heads. Napoleon, the Empress Eugenie, Queen Victoria, the Prince of Wales, Emperor William and the Sultan of Turkey were all numbered among his patients, and it is safe to say that his fees were by no means small. No American, it is said, has ever enjoyed so firm a footing in Marlborough House.

He was a great favorite with Empress Eugenie and he afterward demonstrated his loyalty by acting as her personal escort to England during the troublous times of 1870. One day she said to him: "Doctor, I presume you have saved considerable money from your income?"

Dr. Evans acknowledged that there were a few francs to his credit in bank. But she persisted, and finally learned just how much he was worth. At that time Baron Housemann was planning how to pull down and rebuild Paris. The Empress had in her possession a map of the future capital, showing the full plan of operation. This she placed before him.

The various improvements were all carefully noted, including the projected Bois de Boulogne. "It will be beautiful," cried the Doctor. "It will be the most beautiful city in the world."

"Stupid!" exclaimed the Empress. "Do you think only of the beautiful? Have you no eye to the pecuniary advantages which this offers you?"

Then she showed him another map, showing where she herself had invested in land. The Doctor took his cue. He invested his entire capital in real estate. He purchased plot after plot of ground on the site of the Bois de Boulogne.

The magnificent avenue was finally projected, together with other vast improvements which completely transformed Paris. Real estate increased in value tenfold. Dr. Evans acting upon the "tip" received from the first lady of the land, awoke to find himself one of the rich men of Paris.

The remarkable success of this American dentist, in numbering among his patrons the greatest potentates of Europe, was due to his profound discretion. It is said of him that he never betrayed a confidence.—New York Herald.

Why "Lead" Pencil?

Once pieces of lead were used for marking, and we continue to use the word, though lead is no longer a part of various pencils. History has failed to record the name of the genius who gave the world those most useful little instruments. We have heard all about the discovery of burnt snuff, and the sewing machine, and the typewriter, and all that, but the inventor of the lead pencil has evidently gone down into the shadow of oblivion, "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

"I have to laugh at the queer ideas some people have about pencils," said one manufacturer. "You will scarcely believe it, but the opinions of people who know nothing about it seem to be divided between the melting of the lead and pouring it into the hole in the wood, and cutting out the lead to fit the hole.

"I know," continued the manufacturer, "that not one out of ten thousand persons has the least idea of what this lead is. See, here is a fine black powder; that is graphite, and costs somewhere about twenty-five cents a pound. This white substance is German clay. It comes as ballast in vessels, and all it costs us is for freight. We mix clay and powder together and grind them in a mill, moistening the mass carefully during the process, until the two are thoroughly assimilated and reduced to a paste that is about the consistency of putty. Here are the dies for the leads, into which we press this paste of graphite and clay. These leads are dipped in hot glue and are placed in the grooves as the blocks are made ready. When the lead is put in there snugly and forever, the thin block is glued to the thick one and left to dry thoroughly.—Bookseller and Stationer.

A Vanishing Type.

Only lately have Philadelphians begun to realize and reflect upon the disappearance of the Quakers as we knew them; only lately has it been brought home to us that a general obliteration of the old uncompromising orthodoxy has set in which means the ultimate absorption of the sect. Even now, rare as is the old garb on the streets where it was such a common sight not so many years ago, the assertion that the society is diminishing would meet with doubt and hesitation. We are so familiar with the Quaker, ha is so necessary and potent a type in Philadelphia, that we would not accept the warrant even of statistics; yet, now that the visible limit has been reached, what can we do but awake to the change? We see few broad-brimmed hats and drab bonnets where we once saw many; of those who wear them, the most are old and trembling. If there are young Quakers, how are we to recognize them? Not by their dress, at any rate, except in so far as plainness of cut and sobriety of color still rule in the taste of Friends, whether wealthy or in moderate circumstances; the distinctive costume is being laid aside, with many of the distinctive customs. And why? Because the Society is losing its control over its younger members? because its rigid rules no longer suffice to hold in check the human spirit, with its unconquerable love of freedom? This is the common explanation, and the one desired by those who love romance.—Thomas Wharton, in Lippincott's.

"BLIND JENNIE."

She Lives in a Tenement and Teaches Bible Lessons to the Young.

"Merry Christmas in the Tenements" is the title of an article by Jacob A. Rile that appears in the Century. Mr. Rile says:

In one of the side-streets near the East River has stood for thirty years a little mission church, called Hope Chapel by its founders, in the brave spirit in which they built it. It has had plenty of use for the spirit since. Of the kind of problems that beset its pastor I caught a glimpse the other day, when, as I entered his room, a rough-looking man went out.

"One of my cares," said Mr. Devins, looking after him with contracted brow. "He has spent two Christmas days out of twenty-three out of jail. He is a burglar, or was. His daughter has brought him round. She is a seamstress. For three months, now, she has been keeping him and the home, working nights. If I could only get him a job! He won't stay honest long without it; but who wants a burglar for a watchman and how can I recommend him?"

A few doors from the chapel an alley runs into the block. We halted at the mouth of it.

"Come in," said Mr. Devins, "and wish Blind Jennie a merry Christmas." We went in, in single file; there was not room for two. As we climbed the creaking stairs of the rear tenement, a chorus of children's shrill voices burst into song somewhere above.

"This is her class," said the pastor of Hope Chapel, as he stopped on the landing. "They are all kinds. We never could hope to reach them; Jennie can. They fetch her the papers given out in the Sunday school, and read to her what is printed under the pictures; and she tells them the story of it. There is nothing Jennie doesn't know about the Bible."

The door opened upon a low-ceiled room, where the evening shades lay deep. The red glow from the kitchen stove discovered a jam of children, young girls mostly, perched on the table, the chairs, in each other's laps, or squatting on the floor; in the midst of them, a little old woman with heavily veiled face, and wan, wrinkled hands folded in her lap. The singing ceased as we stepped across the threshold.

"Be welcome," piped a harsh voice with a singular note of cheerfulness in it. "Whose step is that with you, pastor? I don't know it. He is welcome in Jennie's house, whoever he be. Girls, make him to home." The girls moved up to make room.

"Jennie has not seen since she was a child," said the clergyman, gently; "but she knows a friend without it. Some day she shall see the great Friend in His glory, and then she shall be Blind Jennie no more."

The little woman raised the veil from a face shockingly disfigured, and touched the eyeless sockets. "Some day," she repeated, "Jennie shall see. Not long now—not long!" Her pastor patted her head. The silence of the dark room was broken by Blind Jennie's voice, rising cracked and quavering: "Alas! and did my Saviour bleed?" The shrill chorus burst in:

It was there by faith I received my sight,
And, now I am happy all the day.

A Unique Plea.

For the first time in the history of the country, says a Denver correspondent, the theory of somnambulism has been offered as the sole plea in defense of a man charged with murder.

F. C. Sanchez killed his wife last week. He told the officers who arrested him two minutes after the crime that he had been disturbed by a burglar, who had entered their room and killed the woman sleeping at his side. Next day he confessed that he had done the shooting and ascribed the fatality to accident. He demanded a speedy trial and was gratified.

His attorney startled the court by pleading not guilty, and offering the defense that the shooting was done while the defendant was asleep. He claimed that the prisoner labored under the impression that he had been held up on the street the night before, and that the robbers had come to his room. Under this belief, he started in his sleep, and, taking a revolver from under his pillow, fired at the supposed intruders, and killed his wife.

Dr. Tilden was placed on the stand to substantiate the claims, and testified that such cases were known as masked epilepsy, and that medical science had chronicled several fatalities similar to the contention of the defense.

The Kaiser's Kindness.

In 1889 the Kaiser, then Prince William, was leaving his hotel when a great row in the next room led him to find its cause. It was the housekeeper busily sorting laundry articles and exclaiming: "The hussies are hanging their heads out of the windows all the afternoon to see the Prince go away. What has become of the matches? I must go to the basement for some." Catching sight of the Prince, whom she failed to recognize, she said: "Sonny, find an old woman some matches; your legs are longer than mine." "Certainly, mother," replied the Prince, who returned to his room and brought his match-box to the woman.

To Spoil a Show Mountain.

Mont St. Michel, on the Breton coast, is likely to be spoiled from an artistic standpoint, as the department authorities are planning to build a railroad to the mount from Pontorson, the road running over the dyke and on the ramparts, and the station being at the foot of the mount.

Hannibal's Inhuman Strategy.

When Hannibal was fighting Eumenes of Pergamos with a fleet of very inferior strength he hit upon an artifice which would scarcely be sanctioned by the laws of what we are pleased to call civilized warfare. He discovered by means of a bogus message under a flag of truce which ship the king was on board of. He then caused poisonous snakes to be inclosed in earthen jars. These he distributed among several ships and ordered them to close upon the king's galley. In the melee that followed the jars were flung on the deck. The curious bombs were greeted at first with ridicule, which soon changed to panic when the nature of their contents made itself manifest. The galley was extricated from the fight as soon as possible and the captains of the others, believing that the king had taken flight, followed suit, with the result that Hannibal gained a complete victory.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Most Cosmopolitan Town.

What is perhaps the most cosmopolitan town in the United States, if not in the world, is the little city of Red Jacket, Houghton County, Mich. The town is undermined and honeycombed by vast artery-like shafts, drifts, crosscuts, levels and slopes. Every twenty-four hours sees a fortune brought to surface in this little mining town. The adult foreign residents of the town outnumber the native born more than 100 to 1.

Red Jacket, the town proper, has a population of 8,000, including no less than thirty different nationalities, represented as follows: Americans, Welsh, French, German, English, Italian, Austrian, Russian, Scotch, Finlanders, Polish, Hungarians, Irish, Arabians, Greeks, Swedes, Danes, Norwegians, Swiss, Negroes, Brazilians, Belgians, Dutch, Jews, Spaniards, Turks, Persians, Chinese, Mexicans and Moors.

Trick Worked the Wrong Way.

The young man who is willing to be the butt of his own story lives in Detroit, and subscribes more heartily than he ever did before to the sentiment that honesty is the best policy.

"I've paid these night-hawk hackmen a fortune," he begins by way of letting his conscience down easily. "They've given me the worst of it at every angle, and I had no compunction in trying to give one of the craft some of his own medicine. It was in Buffalo. I had about reached the end of my financial string and concluded to come home because there was nothing else to do. I had a $10 gold piece and some small change. There was nothing to waste, so I determined to try a trick that has more than once been worked on these nocturnal hackmen. Boldly hailing one of them, I asked what he would charge to have me at the midnight train. When he innocently proposed a double fare I offered him the gold piece. He couldn't change it, and time was precious. No matter, we could fix it at the depot.

"Away he went with a clatter, for it was a good thing. When he brought up with a band-wagon flourish in front of the station there were just five minutes to spare. Running my hand into my pocket, I hastily sputtered: 'By George, I've dropped that coin in the hack. Wait just a minute till I get a lantern and we'll find it.' Turning a second later, I saw that hack going up the street like an express train, and set my valise down that I might double up to relieve my laughter. The dodge had worked. He would go home to search an empty hack. Then I hurried to the ticket office and called for a ticket, still laughing as I imagined what my victim would have to say. But when I ran my thumb and first finger into my vest pocket my face went long and rigid. I had lost the ten in the hack, and I walked about till morning before I could telegraph home for help."—Detroit Free Press.

When One Can Work Best.

At what hour of the day is a man at his strongest, and so best fitted to do hard work with the least weariness? Probably the answer occuring at once to most persons would be: "When he gets up in the morning." This is by no means the case; on the contrary, according to experiments of Dr. Buch with dynamometer, a man is precisely at his weakest when he turns out of bed. Our muscular force is greatly increased by breakfast, but it attains to its highest point after the midday meal. It then sinks for a few hours, rises again toward evening, but steadily declines from night till morning. The two chief foes of muscular force, according to Dr. Buch, are overwork and idleness. Sweating at work deteriorates the muscles. Many of the great workers of the world have been early risers. But early rising, according to Dr. Buch's doctrine, ought always to be supplemented by early breakfasting.—London Star.

Sapphires of Ceylon.

Some of the most beautiful gems in the world are the white sapphires of Ceylon; for, strange as it may appear to persons accustomed to consider sapphire and deep cerulean blue synonymous, the Cingalese gems, which are the finest in the world, range from soft, velvety blue to peacock blue, graduated in the latter to almost faultless white.

White sapphires are often clouded or streaked with blue, says the Philadelphia Record, being white when looked at transversely after cutting, but having a bit of fine blue tint on the under point. It also occurs in greens and yellows, the former shade being known as the oriental emerald, and the last as the oriental topaz. There is also a red sapphire, or Ceylon ruby, which is valued as highly as the finest Burmese rubies.

Never Awake.

Some people will never wake up till the last horn blows, and then they'll ask if that's the horn for dinner. Delays are dangerous and ruinous. Thousands can say if they hadn't put off an opportunity, they would have been rich and happy. Some never know they have rheumatism until crippled by it, and all the while in pain, thinking it will pass off. But St. Jacobs Oil never delays, and is always wide awake. It goes straight to its work of cure in a business way, and cures rheumatism in any form and at its worst stage. It's a live remedy.

A Close Fit.

"So you like your new flat, do you?"

"Yes; it's very cozy, but there is one thing that has bothered me ever since we moved into it."

"What's that?"

"I hear the mumps are prevalent in this vicinity, and I don't know what we should ever do for room if any of our children were to get them."

If some women were to cast their bread upon the waters it would obstruct navigation.

WOMAN AT HOME

HAT PLUMES.

THERE are plumes and plumes on the new hats, and they droop in a most picturesque manner. There are gray plumes on dark-blue velvet hats, white plumes on delicate gray hats, and black plumes on all sorts and kinds and conditions of hats. It looks as if the ostriches would not have a feather to their backs this winter. But they will be kept in countenance by an army of wingless birds. All the hats which do not have plumes have wings or an occasional whole bird—some as big as hens. The few remaining hats, plumeless and wingless, are decked in plaid ribbons. But plaid hat trimmings are doubtful. In bright color they cheapen almost everything on which they appear.

Care of the Skin in Winter.

Thoughtless women, to prevent chapping, put cold cream on their faces every night, not knowing that in so doing they make it impossible to have a clear complexion. If the skin has been made hard and rough by frost and wind, the cream may be applied a night or two, but if used too often it will produce an oily complexion and cause the pores to enlarge. If the skin needs a tonic, cocoa butter or cocoanut oil thoroughly rubbed in at night after the face has been washed with warm water will be found very beneficial, but either of these must not be used too often, lest they be sure to produce a crop of fine hair which so much annoys sensitive women.

A great enemy to a delicate complexion is a rich, heavy lunch taken in the middle of the day by one who cannot take a nap after, but is compelled to resume labor as soon as the noon recess is ended. It is the wisest plan to eat at midday foods that are very nourishing without being trying to the digestive organs, such as a cup of chocolate and a roll, a good oyster stew, coffee and other light but refreshing food. Spices, condiments, pickles, liquors and sweets are hostile to a clear skin, as they cause great thirst, and that is sure to upset digestion and bring on eruptive disorders of the skin.

Queen Must Not Ride a Wheel.

It is awfully nice to be a Queen, and then sometimes it isn't. Queen Wilhelmina, of Holland, is young and beautiful, but her privy council refuses to let her marry the man of her choice. She could stand this disappointment, but another and greater grief came afterward. She bought a bicycle and learned to ride. The privy council heard of it and straightway held a meeting. They considered the matter seriously and at length, and finally concluded that "such recreation was incompatible with the dignity of the throne." Her majesty was requested to give up the wheel and of course she had to do it. How many American girls want to be queens?

Woman Colonel Married.

Col. Nellie Ely of Nashville, Tenn., was recently married to T. Leigh Thompson of Marshall County, Tennessee. Miss Nellie Ely is a member of the military staff of the Governor of

MISS NELLIE ELY.

Tennessee and the only woman colonel in America except Col. Butt, a Georgia woman on Governor Atkinson's staff. Col. Ely looks very well in her full-dress uniform of white duck with heavy gold embossed epaulets, visored cap, belt of silk and a small, dainty sword, but she wore a bridal veil and orange blossoms at her wedding.

Girls Brighter than Boys.

Out of 222 pupils in the grammar schools of Chicago who attain a certain percentage of efficiency only 25 were boys. This would indicate, says a medical journal, that girls are about ten times as bright as boys. It is hard to understand these things and straighten up the rules of heredity. It is, we believe, the accepted rule that boys "take after" their mothers and the girls after their fathers. If they, the women, are the smarter, the boys, "taking after their mothers," should also be the smarter. If the men are the smarter, then the girls, "taking after their fathers," should be smarter. It is a difficult riddle to unravel.

The American Girl in Fiction.

The American girl, whatever she may be or do, always has her wits about her; she is "smart." While her father delights in managing factories, stock operations or railroads, she delights in managing men. And in every kind of fiction which she dominates the men seem to be uniformly glad to be managed by her. Often in fiction she has been lacking in certain graces—chiefly the supreme grace of tact. But there are signs that our novelists have discovered that the American girl possesses this grace also, and so it happens that to-day she trails through fiction not only with fine clothes, and a beautiful face, and generous deeds, and witty, if impertinent, remarks—but there is developing around her a gracious manner, an unconscious simplicity that shows itself in consideration for the weakness of others—in addition to that keen knowledge of their foibles which was always hers. What we have yet to hope for is that her wealth or her poverty may be made less obtrusive and less a significant part of her always attractive personality.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Brave Cuban Girl.

One of the bravest of the heroines of the Cuban war is Rosa Masso, the beautiful 19-year-old daughter of a wealthy planter. The Spaniards burned the plantation and killed her father and brother. She escaped and joined the insurgents, sometimes nursing the sick and at other times acting as scout. The story of her many narrow escapes has been printed in the newspapers. She was the first woman to cross Weyler's famous trocha.

Perfumes.

The up-to-date woman does not economize on soap, bath or sachet powder, and the result is a choice bit of femininity, reminding one of the breath of flowers. Extracts are an abomination to the well-bred woman, and animal odors, such as musk, civet or ambergris are too pronounced for the toilet table; they are considered vulgar by the woman who wants her belongings to have but the suggestion of perfume.

One's boxes and clothes may be made deliciously fragrant by the many sachets now fancied, and the use of scented woods, sandal wood being in high favor, and cedar which gives a delicious odor. Toilet waters are used in the bath by those who can afford them, and they are both stimulating and refreshing. But no amount of scent or of sachet powder can conceal the lack of frequent bathing, neither can any amount of perfumes produce so dainty a scent as that which comes from absolute cleanliness.

The Gum Habit.

The chewing gum habit has been taken up in England by many young women—students, actresses and others—who have become inveterate chewers. A few days ago an inquest was held at Lincoln on a child, 8 years of age, who died from the effects of eating a pellet of the substance. The symptoms preceding death were those of gastritis, and at the postmortem examination it was found that the mucous membrane of the stomach was inflamed and that there was much local peritonitis. The coroner pointed out that the distribution of such dangerous stuff to young children was a very improper proceeding, and the jury, in indorsing his remarks, added that in its opinion the sale should be absolutely prohibited.

For Rough Hands.

A lotion of one-fourth ounce liquor ammoniac, one-fourth ounce tincture of opium, one-fourth ounce spirits turpentine, six drachms of olive oil, put together in a bottle and shaken well before using. After washing and drying the hands, in the morning, at noon, and in the evening, pour a teaspoonful of the liniment into one hand, rub as though washing them. One great cause of chapped hands is careless drying after washing them.

A Calling Hint.

If a lady driving with friends stops to pay visits en route she will not take her friend into the house where she goes to call unless she is a young lady not paying calls on her own responsibility or unless there is some special reason for making her and the hostess acquainted. Husbands do not often accompany their wives in calling, though there is no reason why they should not do so if they feel inclined.

Face Veil's Injurious.

It has been discovered that all kinds of face veils produce weak sight, headache, vertigo or nausea. The dotted veils are the worst and those with a double thread mesh are more injurious than the single thread. In veils without dots or figures, the vision is made defective in direct proportion to the number of meshes to the inch.

Feminettes.

A woman loves but once; that is, the same man.

Ladies fight with pretty words that are full of fists.

Women never play in a game unless there is another game under it.

Little children and women have no little troubles—they are all big ones.

Women go to prayer meeting to lay out a week's work for their hired man, the Lord.

The equality of the sexes will be firmly established whenever the newspapers print a description of the bridegroom's trousseau.

Gospel will be a pretty word in a woman's mouth when women can distinguish between a poor memory and a clear conscience.

Some persons have minds, and some a thing to guess with; but it is only a handsome woman who can make shift without either.

Femininity may be defined as the art with which a woman graciously permits a hapless man to apologize to her for some offense of hers against him.

When a woman has once fairly sat on a man, forever afterward the entire masculine race takes on the appearance of groveling upholstery.

HUNGRY IN LONDON.

One of the Most Striking Peculiarities of the English City.

Americans who have penetrated as far away from home as London remark, as one of the more striking peculiarities of that metropolis, the extraordinary difficulty of getting something to eat there after midnight. There are perhaps fifty open-all-night restaurants in New York, and in all considerable American cities provision is made for people who have occasion for food when most people are asleep. The restaurant wagons, which during the last two or three years have come to be familiar in most American cities, do business from sunset to sunrise or later, and in themselves form a sufficient safeguard against nocturnal famine. London seems not to have developed even these itinerant havens. Julian Ralph lately communicated to the London Mail a distressing narrative (though happy in its ending) of the anguish of an American gentleman, who left Paris with nothing more than a cup of coffee in him, omitting to take food at Boulogne or on the boat ("I find it's throwing money overboard to eat crossing the channel"), and who found himself in London after midnight, "so hungry that I was all one clamorous appetite with a hat on and a suit of clothes." There was not a bite of anything at his hotel; he had not telegraphed. He was recommended to consult a cabman. Cabby took him to a proprietary club, where he was first refused admittance and afterwards told he could get in by signing an application for membership and paying an initiation fee, but as there was no food in the house except a few sandwiches, he retired. A house near by was said to contain food, which could be had at a cost of a guinea for each edible object ordered—a guinea for a chop, a guinea for a potato, and so on. That didn't do, either. Then the cabby, touched by the anguish of his fare, and assured that the plainest food would more than satisfy a man the sides of whose stomach were knocking together like castanets, drove to "a little green cabin stranded in the roadway in Piccadilly," frequented and sustained by cabmen, and there the suffering American got the steak and potatoes and bread and tea that his system clamored for. The food was good, and the company genial and well-mannered, so the story ended with the return of a happy man to his hotel; but he still wonders that the habits of London should be so very different from the habits of American cities. Other Americans have been heard of whose experiences have stirred in them the same surprise. One of them is Mr. Ralph himself, who says: "Why London does not demand all-night restaurants I don't know, except it be that the English have developed the home, their love of it, and its capacity for giving satisfaction as no other people have. And England, be it remembered, is all English."—Harper's Weekly.

Mining for Heat.

A man in Pennsylvania is trying to make the deepest hole in the world. He has now bored to a depth of 6,000 feet, and the machine continues to delve deeper every day. Before fall the bottom of the drill will have reached a depth of over 10,000 feet, or nearly two miles. The work is under the supervision of Prof William Hallock, of Columbia College, and it is being done for a very strange purpose. Deep holes are usually bored for water or for gas or oil, and sometimes to prospect for minerals of various kinds, but Prof. Hallock is mining for heat. As every one knows, the interior of the earth is a burning, fiery furnace, and it is Prof. Hallock's theory that if he can make a hole deep enough he can obtain a constant flow of steam, which can be utilized for operating machinery. Already Prof. Hallock's hole, which is being bored near the city of Pittsburg, is the deepest in the world. The next deepest is a salt well near Leipsic, in Germany, which measures 5,740 feet in depth. It will be interesting to watch this wonderful experiment. If it is successful the time may come when manufacturers will get all their power from the boundless furnaces at the center of the earth, when our cities will be lighted from the same source, our houses heated, and our railroads, street cars and steamships operated from the same source.

Microbe Causes Baldness.

Baldness is caused by a microbe, according to Dr. E. Sabanard, the famous French dermatologist. The eminent physician has for many years held his present theory on the subject of baldness, and for the past three years he has been engaged in making cultures of the microbes and in performing experiments with them. He now says that if a destroyer is found for the microbe no one need be bald.

Fortunes Awaiting Claimants.

By order of Parliament a report has just been made out and published concerning the unclaimed funds in the keeping of the various English government departments at the present moment. The chancery division of the Supreme Court of Judicature has in its possession over $300,000,000, after paying during the last two years $85,000,000 to successful claimants. The Irish Court of Chancery holds some $50,000,000 of unclaimed moneys, while the unclaimed Government stocks and accumulated dividends retained by the treasury department amount to $28,000,000. Unclaimed dividends in bankruptcy are figured at $50,000,000, while unclaimed army and navy prize money and accumulations of pay exceed $3,000,000. All these funds are used by the British Government until claims thereto have been satisfactorily proved. An endeavor will be made to transfer to the state the custody of unclaimed funds in the hands of bankers and others. These funds are known to amount to a colossal sum, far exceeding the total amount of unclaimed money now in the keeping of the Government.—Boston Transcript.

The Pursuit of Happiness.

When the Declaration of Independence asserted man's right to this, it enunciated an immortal truth. The bilious sufferer is on the road to happiness when he begins to take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most efficacious regulator of the liver in existence. Equally reliable is it in chills and fever, constipation, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney trouble and nervousness. Use it regularly, and not at odd intervals.

Tore Up His Coat.

"It is about time you were taken to task," said the steady client.

"Oh, please don't use that there word," protested Weary Watkins, in tones of agony.

"What word?"

"'Task.'"—Indianapolis Journal.

To facilitate the transportation and preservation of hay an apparatus has been devised at Buenos Ayres for compressing it to one-tenth its normal bulk. In this form, as "hay biscuits," it can be preserved dry and sound an indefinite period, without losing its flavor or value as food.

THERE is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. How to Wash with Ease.

That washing cannot be satisfactorily done with a scant supply of hard water and inferior soap is not always clear to housekeepers, and yet it is the cause of oft-repeated failure. To wash properly, assort the clothes. Put the linens first in a tub of hot water, rub with Ivory Soap, scald, rinse, starch, hang on the line. Wash the colored pieces through clean suds in the same way. When dry, sprinkle, and lay in a basket over night. Iron carefully with well-heated irons.

He has lectured 2,500 times and has entertained nearly 3,000,000 people. To obtain materials for his lectures he has traveled over most of the known world. He proposes now to summarize the lectures in a book. By his lectures he has accumulated a fortune estimated at $500,000.

The Next Thing to It.

The coffee habit is not as bad as the liquor habit, but it is the next thing to it. Coffee and tea drunkards are getting to be a noticeable type. These beverages injure both the nerves and the digestion. Nervous diseases are often produced, and always aggravated, by indulgence in coffee and tea. Yet people fancy they can't get along without these drinks. Perhaps you think so. Try Grain-O for a change. It tastes like coffee. It is a new food drink, made from pure grains. It is full of cheer, warmth and nourishment, without a particle of narcotic stimulant. The old, the middle-aged and the children can drink Grain-O freely, day or night. Use it awhile and you will want no more coffee. And it costs only a quarter as much. Ask your grocer for it. Sold in 15c. and 25c. packages.

MEN CALL WOMAN A MYSTERY.

So She is to Them—Not so to a Woman.

A Woman's Knowledge Saves Mrs. Ebbert From an Operation.

A woman understands women as a man never can hope to. For this reason Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., now known all over the English-speaking world, set to work to help her sex.

After long and patient investigation, Mrs. Pinkham confirmed her own conclusions, namely: that seven-eighths of the sufferings of women are due to disorders of the uterine system. Reasoning on this line, she saw that the only preventive of early breaking down, was a specific medicine which would act alone on the female organism.

This was why she prepared her excellent Vegetable Compound, which has been such a boon to thousands and thousands of women. If you have headaches chiefly at the top of the head, and are troubled by painful menstruation, dizziness, sleeplessness, backache, and that bearing-down feeling, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will tone up your whole system. MRS. CHAS. D. EBBERT, 330 Wood St., Reading, Pa., testifies to the great power of the Compound.

"Mrs. Pinkham—I can say that your medicine has cured me of the pains and troubles which I had. My case was a very bad one, and puzzled the doctor. My womb had fallen and I had terrible pains in my back and hips. I could hardly walk. My husband went to our family doctor, and he prescribed medicine for me, but I found no relief, and grew worse instead of better. The doctor examined me and wanted to perform an operation, but my husband would not consent. Seeing the advertisement in the paper, I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken half of the second bottle, I felt like a new woman. In all I have taken four bottles of your medicine, and can say that I am entirely cured. I hope that every woman suffering as I did, will follow my advice and take your medicine at once."

COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

Thursday's Daily.

The first work of the Board was to go over and carefully examine orders from No. 1504 to 1807 of series P. for the quarter ending Nov. 30, 1897. They compared all the orders with the bills allowed by the Board and the certificates allowed bp the court and found that all orders drawn were proper and correct.

On Tuesday the liquor license of E. S. Hoffman was brought up, but continued till next day.

The matter of a claim of J. W. Hughes came up on Wednesday, but was continued. The B. & O. Land Improvement Co. called up a claim to have taxes refunded as they claim some of their property had been assessed double. Continued and auditor directed to look into the matter.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

D. Widmer and Isaac Whirledge, of Garrett, H. F. Strouse, of Corunna, Daniel Hook, Wm. Oberlin and H. E. Geddes, of Butler; E. S. Hoffman of Auburn Junction, Ed. Eldridge. of Auburn, and Henry Forney, of Waterloo, were granted licenses.

Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

NOT AGREED

It is plain, now that congress has got together, that very little can be done. Neither party is united on any one leading thing. Of course it makes no difference whether the democrats are united or not, as being in the minority they can do nothing any way. But with the republicans in congress it is different. They have a good working majority even in the senate. But they cannot agree. There are certain very prominent things coming up for action, as for example, the annexation of the Hawaiin Islands. This is a special pet of the president, and of the party at large, but it now appears that speaker Reed, Mr. Dingley, in the House, and Senators Hoar and Morrill in the senate will oppose annexation, and there are members of lesser importonce in both Houses who are of the same mind. Those who oppose the measure from principle, do so because they are aware that our national policy has always been opposed to getting any territory outside of the main land of our continent. That is, we did not think it wise or safe to get territory at a distance, especially if it was near the territory of within the influence of other nations. This was the view taken by President Cleveland and for which he was much abused by some of the very men who now are also opposed to the annexation scheme. But there are others and a great many of them who oppose the president's policy because they want to scare him into giving them more patronage. And if he does this, the chances are, they will fall in with the President's views again all right. But at present it looks as if the annexation scheme would have rough sailing and possibly fail It reminds one of the chance we had to get Santo Domingo. in Grant's administration. Grant was willing but Summer, Trumbull, Carl Schurz, and other senators objected, and the scheme was killed. And yet our people, can now see, that it would be much wiser to have nearby territory like Cuba and Santo Domingo than a lot islands like the Hawaiian Islands more than 2000 miles distant. And the same division of opinion exists in the repulican party in congress. as to the money question, to pension to civil service and even on leading tariff issues Altogether it looks as if but littl legislation of importance would be secured this winter.

TRIED THEM ALL.

The List Exhausted, a Specific for the Nerves at Last is Found in

Dr. WHEELER'S NERVE VITALIZER

We are apt to condemn all articles because similar ones prove worthless. Persons often reason; I have nervous prostration, St. Vitus' dance, spasms, rheumatism, can't sleep and am in a debilitating condition; have tried best physicians and most widely advertised remedies, but there is no cure for my case. No matter what your past experience may have been Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer will positively cure every case of nervous trouble—no failures. Here is expert evidence of that fact, Mr. J. H. Hutchings, Bancroft, Mich., for 20 years a successful druggist, tried every preparation he could hear of without benefit. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer cured him. The following are his words, read them:

"I had a spinal trouble for years causing serious nervousness, sleeplessness and headache. Our night watchman can tell you how, many and many a night I have walked the streets for hours, hoping to tire myself to a condition of sleep. During these years I have tried nearly every remedy coming to my notice, with only a stupefying effect like morphine. The use of Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was an exception, its beneficial effects were prompt and lasting; I secured refreshing sleep, my nerves were strengthened and through them my health was restored. From observation and experience I believe Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer to be the best remedy for all nerve troubles, including general debility." Mr. Hutchings is certainly a competent judge and his testimony is significant.

REV. BLANCHARD

The Wolcottville Herald of this week contains half tone illustrations and biographies of Elder Blanchard and wife of that city. Elder Blanchard addressed the young people at the Baptist church here Wednesday night. He has been located at Wolcottville in the ministery for over 40 years. During all his ministerial career he has performed 445 weddings. officiated at 1145 funerals and traveled 12,275 miles in so doing. He preached the funerals of 45 members of his own church at Wolcottville. He did not travel many miles to attend weddings as most people came to him. Some of these he he has known not to have honored a married life well, but the great majority not only multiplied and replenished the earth, but have done honor to themselves in building substantial characters in raising sweet and valuable families, blessing communities where they have lived and honoring the GREAT GIVER of all.

Not only has he married many who have honored themselves as tillers of the soil, but in almost all of the pursuits as well. He pleases to mention some of these: In the law profession, the Hon. Judge Clapp, known in all the states. Also, Judge Tousley, no less eminent as a lawyer. In the practice of medicine are, Drs. Lemon, Harkins and Clark of Albion; Dr. Broughton of Wolcottville, Dr. Newman of South Milford. Of bankers, Charles and Frank Clapp of Albion, and the Hon. L. L. Whitman and son of Wolcottville. Of ministers, the late Rev. Byron Woods, D. D. of Philadelphia; his wife attended school at Wolcottville, and was known as Ella Tousley, the daughter of Judge Tousley. Rev. T. C. Smith and Rev. F. E. Dickinson, one of our own sons, and of no mean proportions as an able preacher.

A. O. U. W. ELECTION.

Wednesday night's meeting of the A. O. U. W. the following officers were elected for the ensuing term:

P. M. W., Jay Love
M. W., S. M. Brandon
Foreman, P. L. Bishop
Overseer, E. T. Cochran
Recorder, W. F. Wise
Financier, E. D. Beadle
Receiver, Chas. Raut
Guide, A. J. Hains
Inside Watchman, M. E. Swisher
Outside Watchman, T. A. McCrum
Med. Ex., F. M. Hines
Rep. to Grand Lodge, E. D. Beadle
Alternate, Jay Love

BOUGHT A HOUSE.

Frank Draggoo has bought the old J. W. Shaffer property on south Main street of the heirs, Mrs. Blum, Mrs. Cullers and Miss Bertha Shaffer. The consideration being $1,050. This will make Mr. and Mrs, Draggoo a nice home. And as it is just south of Mrs. Draggoo's mother's property it is much more desirable to them.

Puny Children

Who would prescribe only tonics and bitters for a weak, puny child? Its muscles and nerves are so thoroughly exhausted that they cannot be whipped into activity. The child needs food; a blood-making, nerve-strengthening and muscle-building food.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-Liver Oil is all of this, and you still have a tonic in the hypophosphites of lime and soda to act with the food. For thin and delicate children there is no remedy superior to it in the world. It means growth, strength, plumpness and comfort to them. Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion.

ANKLE AND ARM.

John Lahnum is now at the home of his father suffering from a broken ankle and arm. He was at work with John Cupp balling hay on the H. Weaver farm when his foot slipped and he fell from the machine with the above result. He is being treated by Dr. Stamets, and daily John has to go through the painful necessity of having his leg and arm "pulled", this being necessary in order to get the fractures back to their proper place.

WAS A QUEER ONE.

We spoke the other day of David Heitz' two-headed calf. Yesterday G. S. McCord spent all day working at it to get it ready for stuffing and mounting He found that the spinal column divided near the tail and that from there to the heads, each was separate. Each head had its own windpipe, that of the right head going into the right lung, and that of the left, going into the left lung. Except for this, the internal organs were single. It had but one heart, but strangely enough, one head died several minutes before the other did. But of course, the heart kept on beating for the other the benefit of the other head. Each head was perfect in all its parts and well developed. The heart was large enough for an animal a year old, and the stomach was rather large. But most of the organs were of the usual size. The queerest part all, was the arrangement of the ribs. Each spinal column seems to have started out to have a full set of its own. The right spinal column had the usual full sized set of ribs extending from its right edge and going down that side in full length. The left side, also had its full set of left ribs, that went down along the left side. But in between the two spinal columns, were short ribs running straight across from one to the other, firmly connecting the two columns. Each of these short ribs started from its own spine or "process" on the spinal column, growing across to the corresponding spine or "process" on the opposite spinal column, making a regular frame bridge across. It should also be stated that each head had its own aesophagus or gullet, extending into the stomach thus giving the one stomach two passages into it, with but one out of it. The calf was of the Durham breed and of fine stock. For the benefit of science, the skeleton preserved would have been of more value than the stuffed animal but Mr. Heitz desired it stuffed and mounted, which Mr. McCord is now successfully doing. But he says the whole strange creature is a study,

MRS. CHASE'S PENSION

The Laporte Argus, is our authority for the statement that Mrs. Chase, widow of the late Governor Ira J. Chase, has succeeded ie getting her pension claim allowed. The Argus says:

Mrs. Ira J. Chase, who formerly resided here, the late Mr. Chase filling the pastorate of the Christian church has been granted a pension of $10 a month. Gov. Chase did ont leave his family much property, though Mrs. Chase has a good home and a small amount of money well invested. The pension proves an acceptable Christmas present for her.

W. R. C.

The Following are the Officers Chosen for the Year.

At the annual electing of the W. R. C. Tuesday evening the following officers were elected:

President, Mary E. Clark

Guard, Mary Campbell
Delegates to Convention, Mrs. Cullers and Mrs. Hamilton.

BLADDER TROUBLES

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, a receptancle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfect action of the kidneys. The second way is from careless local treatment of other diseases.

SAMPLE SENT FREE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder troubles. It is comforting to know that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root fulfills every wish in quickly curing bladder and urinary troubles It corrects frequent calls, inability to hold urine and scalding or stinging pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressinfl cases If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention Auburn COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

"FORMER" VS "Ex."

There are fads and fads. Even in the use of good English we are not without our fads. The latest, in language is to make the word "former" take the place of the good, old-fashion "Ex" which we no doubt originally got out of our Latin grammars. Always up to the present time, we spoke of the ex-president, the ex-senator, the ex-congressman, the ex-minister, the ex-consul and "ex" everything, when we wished to allude to a man who had been "so and so" but who now was "so and so," no longer. Now, all this is likely to be changed. For at least three weeks we have noticed a new form of speech. Now, it is "former," as, former-president," former senator former minister, former consul, etc, etc. Only today, we noticed in a daily exchange that "former President Cleveland has gone hunting." We doubt the wisdom of this change. And would the stiff-necked old Romans have adopted from us a word more cumbersome and awkward, than one of their own? Hardly. Would they have borrowed from us and used, a six-lettered word rather than use their own handy little two-letter prefix? Hardly. We shall take the new term under careful consideration for a time. Then we shall see what we shall see.

Without A Rival.

As a positive cure for sprains, bruises, and pains of all kinds, Salvation Oil has no equal. Mrs. Frank Juif, 518 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes: "I used Salvation Oil in my family and can say it has no rival as a liniment; it certainly cures pains. I sprained my ankle and it cured me and since then I have always used it for any pains and bruises." Salvation Oil is sold for only 25 cents. No other remedy will do the work as promptly.

ST. JOE.

—Deputy Prosecutor Pomeroy was in town Friday of last week.

—George Bartels is at Peru this week. He has gone there with an eye to business, not alone for pleasure.

—If reports are true J. W. Dills is quite sick so much so that he is confined to his bed a greater part of the time.

—The teachers of Concord held their fourth township institute at St. Joe last Saturday, a general good time was had.

—The St. Joe schools will close this week for a two weeks vacation during Holidays.

— It is rumored that J. W. Dills will move to town in the near future and that A. Simonton has rented his farm and will move there soon after the New Year.

—J. P. Court has been quite busy past week and some talk as though a a new court house will have to come this way.

—The case in J. P. court in which Samuel Hindman was plaintiff and Mr. Moore was defendant, was decided in favor of plaintiff. Judgment for $17.83 and costs.

—At present society is all torn up over a law suit that comes from the west end of town it is of a sensatinal character and at this writing has not been decided.

—St Joe is experiencing quite a boom in the selling and buying of Real Estate. Frank Barney has bought the the Knepper property for $600.00. Mart Body the Nichols property for $650.00. Jack Dickerhoof, the property where he lives, consideratipn not known. Frank White a one half interest in the Orangeville mills.

—Our schools this term under the management of Professor Kimes are doing a grand good work while the attendance is not quite as large as former terms interest has not abated and with his able corps of teachers, Prof. Kimes is making the schools a success. Too much cannot be said in praise of any of the teachers. Mr. Clarence Woodcox has had several years experience in teaching and in the grammar room is making a record that he may well be proud of. In the intermediate department Mr. Will Henderson, although a young man is meeting with the best of success. And in the primary room, Miss Addie Widney is queen of the realm. This is her fourth or fifth term in this deparment and is meeting with nothing but a grand success, her attendance is quite large and she is having her hands full but she is equal to any emergency and will win for herself not only the approbation os the patrons of the school but the little ones will rise up and call her blessed. We will venture the assertion that not in DeKalb County is there a more gentlemanly and lady like set of pupils than in the room, in which Miss Widney presides. Trustee Henderson is to be congratulated for his selection of teachers for the St Joe school this term.

ARTISTIC DECORATIONS

from H. B. McCord's drug store. This is putting it mildly too, for the work of a skilled artist is everywhere apparent the arrangement of toys. fancy celluloid goods and everyting for the happy and glorious holiday time. Mr. McCord has lost none of his cunning, and with his past years of experience has made his store one of real pleasure to a person in sight-seeing. He has bent every energy to make this seasons stock of holiday novelties the best to be found in Auburn, and he is anxious for our people to visit the store and draw their own conclusions. Another feature worthy of note is the courtesy and promptness with which patrons are served. Don't conclude your Christmas shopping without making a visit to that splendid store.

B. C & B.

Have you seen the big man in Brown Culbertson & Boland's display window? It is as ingenious as the one they had a year or so ago. This time it is a 7-foot man, who seems to be a prisoner in a cage, the bars being represented by whips that are hung up around. The feet are both confined by big chains, and the man is made up of lap robes, etc, with a teakettle turned bottom up for a head, the spout being his nose. A big wash basin on his head makes him look like Don Quixote The chains on his feet make him look like the "Prisoner of Chillon." But go, look at it and take your choice. It is a cute holiday advertisement any way.

FINE GROUP.

Of the Members of the Present Congress.

We have received from Hon. J. M. Robinson, a fine picture containing the portraits of members of the present congress. The list is full at least as they were originally elected, though a few have died since, and their places are now taken by others, as in case of Holman of Indiana and Cooke, of Illinois. Our own member Mr. Robinson shows up finely in the group of nearly 400 distinguished men. There is no doubt he will make as good a record as the rest. There are but few faces, familiar to DeKalb folks, though that of Mr. Belknap of Chicago, may be recalled as well as the old familiar features of the late W. S. Holman. A few here have met Mr. Heatwole of Minnesota, but to us, he hardly looks natural in this group. It may be however, that it looks as he does now. All are copies of photographs carefully arranged, and showing the hall of the House of Representatives and the distinguished newspaper men in the press gallery, such as Walter Wellman of Times Herald, and W. E. Curtis of the Chicago Record. The picture is a valuable one, and shall have a permanent place in our sactum where our friends can see it.

BACK FROM SCHOOL.

The officers' school of instruction of the Indiana militia closed yesterday and Major Kuhlman and Capt Lahmum returned home this morning coming via South Bend and Waterloo. The boys did not wait at the latter place for a train but hoofed it down over the first snow of the season. The school was of much benefit and the officers express the opinion that it will result in raising the standard of efficiency, and it is the understanding that a midwinter school of the same character will be held every over after this. Lieut. Will T. May, of the regular army, who is assigned to duty with the state militia, says he would rather see the State support twenty first-class companies of militia than forty or fifty mediocre companies. The chief object of this school of instruction, he points out, is to raise the standard of some of the companies in the State. In his recent reports he has indicated that some of the companies must attain a greater degree of efficiency. One of the weaknesses, it is said lies in the inefficiency of company officers, especially captains, who do not apply themselves to a study of the tactics, and the laws of the State under which the National Guard is supported. With the hope of increasing the efficiency of the commanding officers, Lieutenant May stood before the commissioned men of the militia for two hours yesterday, explaining in detail the regular army regulations which are folfowed by the National Guard. He devoted special attention to these exercises designed to make men of better form and more soldier-like in their appearance. For the benefit of the officers he went through many of the arm and shoulder movements included in the exercises which the militiamen are supposed to take regularly.

Another suggestion that has been made is that more companies of the National Guard ought to be in the larger cities and fewer in the smaller cities and towns. The new roster shows that the Guard at this time is made up of forty companies of infantry three batteries, a hospital corps. Two of the companies of infantry—the two colored companies—in that city are not assigned to any regiment, and are known in the service as separate companies. The new companies are those at Roachdale. Ligonier and Manchester, and a company of artillery at Dana.

HOUSEHOLD GODS

The ancient Greeks believed that the Penates were the gods who attended to the welfare and prosperity of the family. They were worshiped as household gods in every home. The household god of today is Dr. King's New Discovery. For consumption, coughs, colds and for all affections of Throat Chest and Lungs it is invaluable. It has been tried for a quarter of a century and is guaranteed to cure, or money returned. No household should be without this good angel. It is pleasant to take and a safe and sure remedy for old and young. Free trial bottles at H. D. McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50c. and $1.

SCHAAB & BRO.

WAITING FOR WEYLER.

Gen. Weyler, appears not only to have been a cruel soldier, but a dishonest man. The latest jabout him is to the effect that he took with him when he started back to Spain about $16,000 that had been put into his hands to relieve the families of the soldiers who perished in big railway disaster in Cuba. If this proves true, he will have added another to his many weak points.

THEY GO FURTHER

The English are said to have seized a small island belonging to Mexico. The Mexican government has sent a gunboat to investigate it. That country goes further than ours in the Monroe doctrine. We say, no foreign nation shall acquire any more territory in the new world, than it now has. Mexico by her president, Diaz, says her plan is, to free every part of the New World, islands and all, from the dominion of any foreign government. That would mean that Spain must give up Cuba and Porto Rico, and her other islands and that England Holland and Denmark would have to give up theirs. We may some day shake off all these but England. She never gives up a thing she gets, and her West India islands are rich and prosperous.

WE'VE HEARD OF HIM

A Dispatch from Kokomo says:

"The case of Howard county against Fleener and Hunter, the "fee ferrets," and County Auditor Garrigus, for the recovery of $1,700, alleged to have been paid illegally as fees for the collection of court costs from neighboring counties ended today. The defendants, without waiting for trial, returned the money to the county treasury. Similar suits against Fleener and Hunter are pending in other counties."

There is no suit pending here but there ought to be one. It will be remembered that Mr. Hunter was employed in this county to perform services which should have been performed by the county clerk and received as fees fifty per cent of all the monies collected. His scheme was to ascertain the amount other counties owed Elkhart county, go and collect it and pocket one-half the amount. Then he would go to another county to find out how much Elkhart county was indebted to it and again make a nice fee. He got 'em a comin' and agoin'. This matter should be investigated even at this late day:—Goshen Democrat.

PENSIONS.

After all the talk against the Cleveland administration, as to pension matters it remains for a republican administration to make the first concerted movement against the pensioners. A law is proposed by them in congress to have all pensioners and their rating published. While this should have been done from the first, the reasons they give for starting out now, at this late day, are not flattering to the veterans. They say they do it because so many are on the list, who should not be. So they will publish the list to expose frauds. But they must know that when they give this as the reason for publishing it at once puts every pensioner on the list as a suspected person. This is a wholesale wrong. If persons are on the list who have no right to be, the fault is with the pension department or some of its servants over the country. Or it may often be the fault of a member of congress who has secured the passage of a private pension bill for the benefit of some voter who could not get on the rolls under the law. But no matter how the person got on the list, he should be taken off by the same authority that put him on. But to make the entire list a reproach because now and then an unworthy person is found on it, is wrong. We repeat, this list should have been published from the first as a merc business act, and a matter of news. But its publication now will not cut off any name not entitled to a pension. It will only serve to bring the whole matter into disrepute and make many worthy men the object of suspicion. The change in the law may not be made, but if made at all, it looks as if it were a dodge to get cheap political notoriety and at the same time catch a lot of voters in the southern states, who would like to see the pension list cut down any way.

ITS A BEAUTY

The first window decorations for the holidays which shows real hard work and artistic beauty is that of G. H. Yesbera, the clothier and gents furnisher. This window was arranged by his head clerk, George Kuhlman, and it shows that he has great ability as a decorator. With the aid of several extra incandescent lights it presents a very handsome views at night. MATTHEWS' SILVERWARE

The 107 pieces of silverware, which were stolen, last July, from the home of ex-Gov. Matthews, near Clinton, were found beneath a haystack by a colored man, Wednesday, who chased a rabbit into the stack and began boring for it. The only articles which were not recovered were a dozen salad forks, which were the only plated articles in the lot. It is supposed that the thief was afraid to offer it for sale. The stack was on the farm adjoining that of the ex-governor.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

WHEEL EXPLODES.

Fatal Accident in an Iron and Steel Mill.

One man was killed, one fatally injured, and a number of others hurt by the bursting of a fly wheel at the South Third street plant of the Oliver Iron and Steel Company in Pittsburgh, Pa. The names are:

Adam Brodrich, wire drawer, aged 30 years, killed instantly.

Frank Roen, wire drawer, fatally injured.

Joseph Brown, engineer, arm broken.

Andrew Kozmatak, a laborer, injured about the back and head.

The others who were injured were able to go to their homes. The accident was caused by the engine becoming ungovernable. The fly wheel was fifteen feet in diameter, and weighed several tons. The engine was completely wrecked, and the nail mill will be idle until the damage can be repaired.

M'COY A WONDER.

The Hoosier Lad Put Creedon Out in Fifteen Rounds.

Norman Selby of Rush County, Indiana, better known as "Kid" McCoy, is undoubtedly the middleweight champion pugilist of the world. He met Dan Credon of New Zealand, in the arena of the Puritan Athletic Club at Long Island City, and after fighting fifteen lively rounds, made the foreigner throw up the sponge and acknowledge the "Hoosier's" superiority. Long before the big event took place the building was crowded to excess, and bets were freely made, with McCoy a favorite at 10 to 8. The "Kid's" wonderful science and self-possession were always in evidence, and these, combined with the advantage in height and reach, enabled him to outpoint his more stockily-built antagonist.

Presidential Appointments.

The President has sent the following nominations to the Senate:

William W. Thomas, Jr., of Maine, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Sweden and Norway.

Hamilton King of Michigan, to be Minister resident and Consul General of the United States to Siam.

James C. McNally of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of Legation and Consul General of the United States at Bagota, Columbia.

Edgar Achorn of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of Legation of the United States at St. Petersburg, Russia.

Murder Mystery.

San Francisco special: This city has been startled by another crime which in some respects resembles the Durrant murder. It is surrounded by the mystery that surrounded that famous tragedy. The other evening Mrs. Mary Clute, a wealthy woman of this city, was found dead in a room of her flat. Her head was crushed and her body bore other marks of violence. She had been criminally assaulted and murdered by parties unknown.

Perished in Fire.

At Ottawa, Ont., the residence of Patrick Leahy was burned and Leahy and five of his children, Thomas, Marie, Katie, Maggie and Patrick, the oldest but 9 years of age, perished. Mrs. Leahy and a boy named Frank, aged 5 years, were saved. It is supposed that Leahy dropped a lighted lamp which he was accustomed to carry around the house.

Durrant Says He Will Never Hang.

Theodore Durrant, in an interview, says: "I will never be hanged. I know that help is coming once more, as it has always come to me before in my extremity." This statement has caused a revival of the often-expressed opinion, that when satisfied his last hope was gone, he would commit suicide if possible.

Murderous Burglars.

Mrs. Robert Gunn, a strange old recluse, was found in her house at Trenton, N. J., dead. She had been struck on the head by some blunt instrument by burglars and killed. She was also bound with a towel and gagged. It is supposed that robbery was the motive.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne.

The following are the attractions at the Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Dec. 25—Matinee and night, "The Last Stroke."

Dec. 31.—"For Fair Virginia."

Uncle Tom's Cabin Hero Dead.

Lewis George Clark, 96 years old, the original George Harris of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," died at Lexington, Ky.

Coal Combine.

A coal combine, including all the large dealers, in Cincinnati, with the exception of two, has been organized, with a capital of $4,000,000. It is given out that there is no intention on the part of the combination to advance prices.

Gift for Peary.

A. C. Harmsworth, England's patron of the Arctic exploration, has presented the Arctic ship "Windward" to Lieut. Peary. It will have her overhauled and sent to Arctics for use in the forthcoming expedition.

Says Mileage Books Were Forged.

The Santa Fe Railroad Company is said to have been swindled out of several thousand dollars by means of forged mileage books, which have been sold by scalpers in Kansas City and Chicago. An employe of a Kansas City scalper has been arrested and taken to Chicago.

Dover Castle Scorched.

The eastern portion of the castle at Dover, England, was completely destroyed by fire, and the western portion was badly damaged. Efforts were made to save the articles of historic and artistic value, which were numerous in that portion of the castle.

WILD WEATHER INTERFERES

The Price Situation, However, Is One of Sustained Strength.

Bradstreet's commercial report for the week says: "Mild weather throughout most of the country has interfered to some extent with the distribution of winter-weight clothing and other seasonable goods, and trade from first hands is quieter even than last week. Jobbers and retailers, however, report a steadily increasing and in some regions very active business in holiday goods, groceries and kindred products. Favorable reports come from Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis and St. Paul. The price situation is one of sustained and even aggressive strength. Wheat is higher, and all other cereals have sympathized with wheat. Coffee, copper, cotton, dairy products, leaf tobacco and raw sugar are also among the prominent staples which have been enhanced in value. The decreases have been few and slight. Cereal exports continue very large, though showing a falling off from last week's heavy total. Total exports of wheat and flour from the United States and Canada this week aggregated 6,005,638 bushels, against 6,699,000 bushels last week. Corn exports also show a falling off, aggregating 3,068,000 bushels this week, against 4,585,000 bushels last week."

CELEBRATED CASE DECIDED.

The Nebraska Supreme Court Passes on the Powers of Receivers.

The Supreme Court at Omaha, Neb., has passed upon the case of A. U. Wyman, receiver of the Nebraska and Iowa Fire Insurance Company, against L. B. Williams, George F. Wright, S. R. Johnson and other stockholders and directors of the company, affirming the decision of the District Court handed down by Judge Walton in 1892. The decision of the Supreme Court, in effect, is that the authority of the receiver of an insolvent corporation to collect assessments is unquestioned; that the members of a board of directors of an insolvent corporation who took part in its meetings are in no position to question their liabilities for the amount of assessments levied at such meeting, because of the fact of no judgment having been rendered against the corporation.

HAYTI MAY FIGHT.

Belief Prevails That She Will Not Be Coerced This Time.

A Washington dispatch to the New York Herald says that Hayti may once more be submitted to humiliation similar to that inflicted by Germany in the Lueders case. In the present instance Italy is the presumably aggrieved party. The cause is the alleged illegal seizure of an Italian vessel and the killing of an Italian. Should Italy resort to force to collect an indemnity the opinion prevails in administration circles that President Sam will be forced by his people to declare war. Minister Leger and the members of the Haytian legation do not believe Hayti is responsible for either of the matters above alluded to. What this country will do is wholly problematical.

TEST OF TAX LAW.

Supreme Court Will Hear Arguments Jan. 12 Next.

The United States Supreme Court will hear the cases involving the constitutionality of the inheritance tax law Jan. 12. There are three cases—the Drake, Torrence and Sawyer estates, but these are to be consolidated and heard together. The Illinois Supreme Court has already decided that the law was unconstitutional. Attorney General Akin of Illinois is already in Washington preparing the briefs to be submitted by the State.

Registered Mail Stolen.

Investigation is now being made of what is supposed to be one of the biggest robberies in the history of the New York postoffice. The robbery is said to be in the railway mail service and confined exclusively to registered letters. The exact amount taken cannot be learned, but it is stated unofficially to be in the neighborhood of $100,000. This figure is thought to be excessive by some who are investigating the case, but all agree that it is the largest amount ever taken at any one time in the registry department. The robbery is confined, so far as investigation has shown, to that section of the Central Railroad of New Jersey which is known as the New York, Somerville and Easton branch. The discovery was made on Nov. 9, but the secret was kept by the postoffice authorities until now. It is known, so the statement is made, that $30,000, the total amount carried in two bags, was taken. This sum was missing on Nov. 9. How long the defalcation had gone on prior to that time has not been ascertained. On the day the robbery was discovered Robert E. Lang, a clerk employed on the New York, Somerville and Easton branch, disappeared, and has not been found. In addition to Lang there were employed W. J. McLaren, P. S. Tooker and J. D'Arcy. Since Nov. 7 hundreds of complaints have reached postoffices making inquiries after registered letters that never reached their destination. The chief inspector and his staff at the potsoffice in New York have several files filled with these complaints.

Wreck in a Tunnel.

A heavy freight train drawn by two locomotive crashed into a train of empty coal cars in the Vossburg tunnel, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near Wilkesbarre, Pa. Both engines and about sixteen freight cars were derailed, blocking the tunnel completely. The wreck took fire. Wilkesbarre and Tonawanda firemen worked all day before the flames were subdued.

Death in Spider's Bite.

Mrs. Sarah Cassidy of New York was bitten on the cheek by a spider nine days ago. Her face became swollen until her right eye was almost closed, but as she suffered no pain she would not allow her husband to procure medical aid. Upon returning from a visit the other night, she was taken with weakness at the heart and died before medical aid could reach her.

Texas Cattle to Cuba.

The export of Texas cattle to Cuba is rapidly growing. The cattle syndicates, I. F. Berndez & Co. and Cuetro De Los Encomenderos, which have been exporting cattle to Cuba, have consolidated and established American headquarters at San Antonio. The Havana trade of these syndicates will require 10,000 head of cattle per month.

Chilian Cabinet Resigns.

The entire Chilian cabinet has resigned. The event has caused a sensation. The cabinet was appointed last August, to succeed the ministry formed on Aug. 9, under the premiership of Orrego Huco, which in turn succeeded the Antunez cabinet that retired on June 23 last.

Inhaled Hard Coal Fumes.

At Toledo, O., Otto Lempke, aged 22, and Bertha Lempke, aged 18, were overcome in their home by breathing escaping gas from a hard-coal burner. They may die.

In Norway for Reindeer.

An agent of the United States Government named Kjeitberg has arrived at Christiania, Norway, to buy reindeer for the Klondike relief expeditions.

Want South American Trade.

An expedition is to be sent to South America by United States manufacturers next April in a chartered vessel, the "Bon Voyage." The itinerary of the seven months' cruise of this floating expedition of samples of American goods, including almost everything, from cuff buttons to plows, has just been issued. The enterprising salesmen will travel down from the Guianas to Buenos Ayres, stopping at the large cities of each State and going to inland towns by rail to make seductive offers to merchants there. Georgetown, Paramaribo, Cayenne, Rio Janeiro, Bahia and adjacent cities are numbered among those scheduled to hear the broken Spanish of the wily Yankee "drummer." Facts are set forth in the itinerary which seem surprising to one who has not recently studied South American geography. Some of the cities contain enormous populations; Rio Janeiro, 600,000; Buenos Ayres, 600,000, with nineteen stations on the 11,000 miles of Argentine railroads, which contain from 10,000 to 65,000 people each. Over 1,000,000 people are thus connected with Buenos Ayres in this faraway country that is said to be competing so vigorously for the wheat, cattle and pork business of the world. These cities make markets attractive to enterprise. Said A. L. Lowe of Chicago, who is in charge of this expedition: "The present method of traffic with South America, where so little is manufactured, is awkward and inefficient. The purpose of the visit is create a demand for our American goods that they may later be sold to the new customers through commission men, as in a small way is done at present. We hope to plant the seeds for an enormous increase of trade."

PHILADELPHIA FIREMEN HURT.

Touch a Live Wire at a $100,000 Fire—One May Die.

While fighting a fire in the five-story brick building, 1025 Market street, Philadelphia, Foreman George Gaw of engine company No. 4 was struck by a live wire and fell from the third-floor landing of the fire escape to the ground, sustaining injuries from which he probably will die. Foreman Robert Wilsey of company No. 1 was also struck by a live wire, but was not seriously injured. John Connors of engine company No. 20 was hurt by a falling brick. The loss on the building occupied by F. W. Klinger is $100,000—insured. H. Hines, aged 35 years, was knocked down by an engine on its way to the fire and was so badly injured that he is not expected to live. Another engine struck and badly injured Valentine Hoffner, aged 39, and Hoseman John McCuen, aged 26, was thrown from a hose cart and severely bruised.

MYSTERIOUS MURDER.

San Francisco Woman Is Killed with a Hammer.

San Francisco has another murder mystery. Mrs. Mary C. Clute was assaulted and murdered in a flat at 803 Guerrero street. She was a wealthy resident of Watsonville. Mrs. Clute rented the flat only the day before. A few hours later the people in the adjoining flat heard screams, and found Mrs. Clute dead, with her head crushed in, apparently with a hammer. A carpenter had been working in the flat, and he was seen to leave hurriedly by a side alley at the time of the screams.

Train Kills a Man.

The Pittsburg special train bearing President McKinley, Mrs. McKinley, Abner McKinley and the members of the cabinet and a number of friends, en route from Canton, O., to Washington, struck and instantly killed Louis Moinet, a laborer, walking on the track near Canton, O. His head was torn from his body. The President was much disturbed at the distressing accident so soon after the sad ordeal of the day.

Millions Gone to Waste.

Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, has, at the request of the Senate at Washington, made an estimate of the saving that would have occurred in the compilation of the last census, had the census office at that time been under civil service rules. According to Mr. Wright, the work could have been done for $5,894,253, instead of $15,687,524. Thus a saving of nearly $10,000,000 could have been effected.

Shot in the Back.

Another assassination has been placed to the record of Tangipahoa parish, Louisiana. The other evening in the full glare of the hotel lights S. B. Mullen, a stranger there, was shot to death. He was standing on the hotel gallery and the assassin shot him from behind.

Dying Alone in Cuba.

A sheep herder near Livermore, Cal., found Chas. Martinez, once a prominent merchant of Oakland, Cal., dying of pneumonia in a lonely cabin on a cattle range. Martinez died a few hours afterward.

Tobacco from Cuba.

The Ward line steamer Orizaba has arrived at New York, bringing from Havana 391 bales of tobacco, being the first shipment of the weed from the port in many months.

Didn't Know It Was Loaded.

Robert Schefler, aged 17, shot and killed his brother Harry, aged 13, at St. Louisville, O. He did not know the gun was loaded.

President's Mother Dead.

Mrs. Nancy Allison McKinley, mother of President Wm. McKinley, died at her home in Canton, Ohio.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

Mr. Lodge (Mass.) made an effort in the Senate Monday to secure an immediate vote upon his immigration bill, which is substantially the same measure that was passed by the Fifty-fourth Congress and vetoed by President Cleveland. Mr. Allen (Neb.) objected to an immediate vote and suggested that the final vote on the amendments and the bill be taken on Monday, Jan. 17, at 3 p. m. This suggestion was accepted by Mr. Lodge and the order for vote at that time was made. Mr. Gorman, chairman of the Democratic steering committee, presented an order which was adopted, rearranging some of the committee assignments of some of the Democratic members, made necessary by the incoming of new members. Mr. Pettigrew (S. D.) called up the bill granting to settlers the right to make second homestead entries. He made a brief explanation of the measure. It gave all persons who were not at the time owners of land under the homestead law the right to make second homestead entries. Each person would be entitled to acquire 160 acres of land. The bill was passed. A bill providing for the erection of an addition to the public building at Los Angeles, Cal., to cost $250,000, was passed. Mr. Wilson (Wash.) presented a resolution directing the civil service commission to transmit to the Senate a statement by fiscal years since 1890 showing the total number of persons examined, the total number passed and the total number appointed in the several branches of the Government service at the beginning of each of those fiscal years. The resolution was agreed to. The Senate then adjourned. Excepting the reporting of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, the House did no public business Monday. The entire session was consumed in adjusting a personal dispute between Mr. Hepburn of Iowa and Mr. Norton of Ohio, which grew out of a controversy that occurred during the debate on the pension bill. The point at issue was as to whether a certain word used by Mr. Norton, but which he afterward disclaimed any intention of using, should appear in the permanent record. The House by a party vote, 136 to 121, sustained Mr. Hepburn.

On Tuesday the Senate, on motion of Senator Hoar, adjourned as a mark of respect to President McKinley, whose mother was buried that day.

Wednesday's proceedings in the Senate were enlivened by an interesting debate upon the bill presented by the Foreign Relations Committee providing for the prohibition of pelagic sealing by Americans. The provisions of the measure were explained by Mr. Davis. Mr. Pettigrew (S. D.) sharply antagonized the measure, saying that this country had already suffered more than enough humiliation on account of the seal business, and that he favored the settlement of the question by killing all of the seals as they appeared at the rookeries of the Prybilof Islands, if by the first of June next Great Britain also had not agreed to the prohibition of pelagic sealing. He offered an amendment to that effect, but it was defeated. The bill was passed by a vote of 37 to 14. Mr. McBride of Oregon endeavored to secure the adoption of his resolution directing the Secretary of War to supply relief to the suffering miners in the Klondike region and appropriating $250,000 for that purpose. The resolution was amended so that the supplies might be transported by means of reindeer. Mr. McBride consented finally that the resolution should be recommitted to the Military Affairs Committee, with the understanding that it would be promptly reported. The session closed with a spirited civil service debate upon the bill presented by the Census Committee providing for the appointment of a director of the census and thirty-two employes who should form the skeleton of an office force for the twelfth census. In the House the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was discussed, but only one amendment of importance was adopted. It reduced the clerical force at the pension office ninety-five, involving a reduction in salaries of $115,000. The civil service question was the chief topic of discussion, and the proposition of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Vanderlip to retire clerks for age was made the text for denunciation by Mr. Moody of Massachusetts and Mr. Johnson of Indiana, both of whom are defenders of the civil service law.

In the House on Thursday a bill passed appropriating $175,000 for relief of people who are in Yukon river country, and also bill passed by the Senate the day before to prohibit pelagic sealing by American citizens. Former bill encountered practically no opposition. Bill to prohibit pelagic sealing warmly antagonized by Mr. Johnson of North Dakota, Mr. Loud of California, Mr. Hepburn and others. In the Senate resolution directing the Secretary of War to send supplies to American and other sufferers in Klondike region passed. Mr. Pritchard of North Carolina, chairman of civil service investigating committee, delivered brief speech upon execution of civil service law as developed by his committee. Senate passed bill directing Secretary of Treasury to purchase or construct suitable vessel for revenue cutter service on Yukon river, Alaska, to cost not to exceed $40,000. Mr. Allison of appropriations committee reported favorably House joint resolution providing for recess of Congress from Dec. 18, 1897, to Jan. 5, 1898. Adopted. Mr. Hawley of Military Affairs Committee reported resolution of Mr. McBride of Oregon for relief of American miners and other sufferers in Yukon valley, Alaska. Committee struck out all but enacting clause and amended by appropriating $250,000, which is to be used by Secretary of War for purchase of subsistence and supplies and for their transportation and distribution. Adopted.

A Seductive Weed.

In Southern Arizona the jail and prison officials have their hands full in trying to prevent the smuggling into their institutions of the seductive marijuana. This is a kind of "loco" weed, more powerful than opium. It grows from seed by cultivation in Southern Arizona and in Mexico. It is a dangerous thing for the uninitiated to handle, but those who know its uses say it produces more ravishing dreams than opium. The Mexicans mix it with tobacco and smoke it in cigarettes, inhaling the smoke. When used in this way it produces a hilarious spirit in the smoker that cannot be equaled in any other form of dissipation. When smuggled inside the prison walls its devotees readily pay $4 an ounce for it, but free men buy it on the outside for 50 cents an ounce. General Shriver, of the prison force at Yuma, has just unearthed a large quantity of the weed that had been cached within reach of the convicts who work in the outside gangs.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

ACTOR TERRISS SLAIN.

Stabbed to Death in London by a Super Named Archer.

William Terriss, the well-known actor, was assassinated Thursday night as he was about to enter the stage door of the Adelphi Theater in London. He had just left his cab and was walking across the pavement when a man rushed upon him with a knife and stabbed him immediately below the heart.

Mr. Terriss was carried into the theater and doctors were summoned from the Charing Cross Hospital, but he died within fifteen minutes. The murderer was seized by some of the bystanders and given into the custody of the police. He gave his name as Archer, and is supposed to have been a super at the Adelphi Theater several years ago. No motive for the murder was ascertained.

Mr. Terriss had been playing a leading part in the English version of William Gillette's American drama, "Secret Service." He reached the theater at his customary hour, driving there alone from his lodgings. He stepped from the cab to the pavement near the stage entrance and was making his way through the usual crowd that throngs the spot at the time, when a man darted toward him from behind. He concealed a long dagger beneath a cloak that covered his shoulders, and was thus enabled to hide his purpose from the bystanders. It was only when Mr. Terriss fell that the crowd realized that a crime had been committed.

"My God! He's stabbed me!" Terriss shouted as he fell. "Don't let him escape!"

Mr. Terriss was carried into the theater and up the stage stairway as far as the first landing, where he was laid on the floor. He died surrounded by the members of the company and the theater staff. A large audience had already assembled in the theater, to whom the manager announced from the footlights that Mr. Terriss had met with an accident that prevented giving a performance. As the audience dispersed the newsboys were crying special editions of the evening papers, and the fact that Mr. Terriss had been murdered became quickly known. It caused a remarkable scene along the Strand, expressions of horror and indignation being heard on every side.

ALPHONSE DAUDET DEAD.

Sudden Ending of Life of the French Writer at Paris.

Alphonse Daudet expired in Paris Thursday night. He was dining with his family when he was seized with a sudden syncope. Physicians were summoned, but he died almost immediately.

Alphonse Daudet was born at Nimes of poor parents May 13, 1840. In 1857, with his brother Ernest, he went to Paris to try to gain a livelihood by literary pursuits. His first publication was a volume of poems entitled "Les Amoureuses," which appeared in 1858, and won for him a reputation that led to his employment on several newspapers. It was while writing under the name of "Baptistet," or under his real name, novels, tales and newspaper articles that he achieved his real popularity.

FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Receipts of American Board Reached a Total of $642,781.

The annual report of the American Board of Foreign Missions shows total receipts from all sources of $642,781, of which New England contributed $386,484; Illinois, $38,915; Wisconsin, $9,249; Michigan, $18,735; Iowa, $13,136, and Indiana, $1,351.

The report deals at length with Turkish massacres and says that while many Christians were killed or fled, the number of professing Christians exceeds that previous to the outrages. The wounds left by massacres have been slowly healing, though in several places the suffering has been quite as great as in the previous year. The demand for indemnity for losses incurred at Harpoot and Marash, amounting in all to $100,000, have been pressed, as yet without result. The changed conditions at Constantinople and the arrival of Dr. Angell, the new United States minister, may reasonably be expected to secure early and satisfactory action in regard to this claim and all other material questions at issue between the United States Government and Turkey.

FOR POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

National Board of Trade Warmly Discusses the Proposition.

The first matter which came before the National Board of Trade at its session in Washington Wednesday was a resolution favoring the establishment of postal savings banks, which was introduced by the Chicago Board of Trade. It was stated in the resolution that the people should be encouraged to deposit their savings in a department of the national government. The passage of the resolution was advocated by Mr. Lyon of Chicago, who said that the secret of saving lies in beginning. An objection was that it would concentrate money in the cities and would interfere with the business of building associations, etc. After some discussion the question was referred to a committee to report at the next meeting.

The question of artificial irrigation was next discussed, the basis being a resolution offered by the Pittsburg Chamber of Commerce, which recommended that Congress enact laws to place the supervision of all irrigation enterprises in the hands of the United States authorities, where such work is undertaken upon waterways affecting interstate navigation.

Mr. Pence of Cincinnati presented the report of the committee on international waterways. The report urges Congress to continue such legislation and to make such appropriations as will provide for deepening the channel of the Mississippi river so that at least six feet be permanently maintained from the mouth of the Missouri southward. The report was adopted.

The afternoon session was chiefly devoted to currency discussion. The gist of the resolutions adopted was an indorsement of the single gold standard, the gradual retirement of United States notes, the enlargement of the national bank circulation with a gradual reduction in the tax on the same, and, finally, the establishment of national banks with a capital of $25,000 or over in towns of over 2,000 population. A motion to locate a permanent headquarters for the National Board of Trade in Washington met with general approval, but was referred to a special committee for final action. The active prosecution of the Nicaraguan canal project was heartily indorsed.

STEAMER CLEVELAND LOST.

Vessel Is Wrecked on the Coast of Vancouver Island.

Uncertainty as to the fate of the overdue steamer Cleveland, which sailed from San Francisco Dec. 4 for Seattle, was cleared away by the receipt of a telegram from Captain Hall, master of the ship, addressed to the owner. From the rather indefinite details so far received it appears that the steamer is a total wreck on the west coast of Vancouver island, in Barclay sound, twelve miles north of Cape Beale. The captain and six others are safe, but twenty-two are still missing and it is feared they were drowned.

The steamer broke down during a severe storm off the mouth of the Columbia river. Captain Hall tried to put into Puget Sound, but the fury of the gale and rapidity of the current combined to make the vessel totally unmanageable, and when she finally ran ashore on Barclay sound, the panic-stricken crew rushed for the boats.

Despite the warning of Captain Hall, who advised the men to stick to the ship, she was beached. None of these boats have as yet been heard from and it is feared that they are lost, although it is probable that they may have landed on the coast of Vancouver island at some remote point. The captain, chief engineer, purser, three sailors and one fireman, who remained on board the Cleveland, succeeded in reaching the shore through the surf safely. The vessel and cargo was valued at $75,000, on which there is little insurance.

SPAIN MAY GIVE UP CUBA.

Suspicion Increases That an Evacuation Is Actually Intended.

There is a suspicion in Washington official circles, which is gradually becoming a conviction, that Spain is preparing to turn the island over to the Cubans. A correspondent says that there is no doubt that the Spanish Government and people are sick of the war. Some of the officials here suspect that Spain would be glad to get rid of Cuba, if she could do it gracefully, and without seeming to acknowledge that she has been whipped.

These views were strengthen by a dispatch which Senor Dupuy de Lome, the Spanish minister, received from Captain General Blanco, containing notice of the granting of what appears to be an order of amnesty to all political exiles from Cuba. This indicates that Captain General Blanco has revoked the orders of Weyler, under which American citizens were expelled from the island. If Blanco intends to adhere honestly to the policy outlined in his dispatch to the Spanish minister, everybody expelled from Cuba, except common criminals, may go back to the island with assurances of their safety as long as they obey the law.

NEW POSTAL CARDS.

Designs and Sizes Different from Those Now in Use.

The Postoffice Department is soon to issue an entirely new set of postal cards, and, incidentally, as a result of greater economy in their manufacture, the Government is to save at least $50,000 per year.

The cards are to be slightly smaller than those now in use, and, as millions of them are issued by the department annually, a part of the saving is attributable to this reduction in size.

There are to be three styles of cards in the new issue. The ordinary single card, for both domestic and internal use, is to be 2 15-16 by 4 15-16 inches, and a double return card, for both domestic and international use, which is to be 5½x6½ inches. The smaller card is in entirely new size; the ordinary single card is to be one-fourth of an inch narrower than the corresponding card now in use, and the double reply card is also reduced a quarter of an inch in width.

No change whatever is to be made in the design of either the single international card, the double domestic or the double international card. New designs have been adopted for the ordinary domestic card and the new smaller domestic card.

SECOND CALL TO BUSINESS MEN

Are Asked to Assemble in Indianapolis Jan. 25.

The convention of business men which met in Indianapolis last January and authorized the appointment of the monetary commission will be called together again for the purpose of considering the commission's report. This was decided upon at a meeting of the executive committee of the convention Wednesday in Washington.

The new convention will be held in Indianapolis on Tuesday, Jan. 25. The invitation will go out, as before, to all boards of trade, commercial clubs and similar organizations in all cities of the United States having a population of 8,000 or more. The executive committee determined upon this course with a view to crystallizing public opinion in support of the report of the monetary commission, in case the plan presented by the commission shall commend itself to the business community

SEND THEM TO BED WITH A KISS.

O mothers, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise and the play;
For the day brings so many vexations,
So many things going amiss;
But, mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

The dear little feet wander often,
Perhaps, from the pathway of right,
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night.
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for the sweet children voices,
For a sweet childish face at the door.
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
You'd give all the world just for this;
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

A MULE'S OBSTINACY.

AND HOW IT LED TO A MARRIAGE.

About two miles from my house, on my Dakota wheat farm, stands one tall, lonely tree. It is the only object in sight that breaks the low horizon, and for many a long mile, north, south, east or west, no other tree can be found. It stands just on the high bank of Smoky river, which goes curling and winding across the country eastward, and close beside it stands Chris Tronsen's log house, built of logs brought down the river in the spring time from the North.

One day, early last spring, I had been to the next town to get an iron bolt made at the blacksmith's, to replace one that had been broken the day before, and was riding home. My mule was loping at a good rate along the road which followed the river. And as we reached Chris's log house, which had just been newly whitewashed outside, I saw Chris sitting calmly on the door step, while Lotta, his wife, was lifting the heavy harness, and throwing it on to "Yack," their old white mule.

"Chris must be either sick or very lazy," I said to myself, "to sit and let his wife harness the mules." I did not know much about Chris then, but giving him the benefit of the doubt, I shouted, in passing:

"Sick, Chris?"

Chris shook his head in what I thought was a rather sheepish way, and Lotta looked over her shoulder and laughed.

In the hurry of the day's work, this occurrance slipped from my mind. But some time afterward, when I happened to pass their place again, I saw Lotta out in the fields driving the mules, which were fastened to the seeder. This in itself would have not been surprising, for the Norwegian women in the Territory, with their vigorous frame and robust health often work with their husbands at the out-door labor. But I saw great, robust Chris himself paring potatoes outside the door. And just as I rose into view from below the river-bank, he caught up his pan and slipped into the house.

"No doubt he is a lazy, good-for-nothing fellow," I said to myself, "who has a thrifty, energetic wife. And so he sits down and does her light work, while she is out sowing the wheat. It might not have a bad result if he could be harnessed up with one of the mules for a day, and made to work under the whip."

After that I saw Chris himself at work in the field several times. But one evening a week or two later, I passed there again. The mules were fastened outside the straw barn. The ground had been very wet for two or three days past, and of course the mules' legs were fairly coated with sticky mud, which had partially dried on. Lotta was hard at work over the old white mule, scrubbing and rubbing, scraping and brushing and currying, as if her life depended upon her success. And there, on an overturned barrel, sat Chris, much as his ease, calmly smoking his pipe, and looking complacently on. I remembered what I had said to myself before about his laziness, and now I added:

"I will just stop for a few minutes, and see if the presence of a stranger won't shame the fellow into taking off his coat and going to work in his wife's place."

So I tied my mule to a ring at the corner of the house, and walked over to where Chris was sitting. He looked up and smiled, and said, "Good-evening" with the same sheepish expression I had noticed before. And Lotta paused for a moment and stood up, her face glowing with the exertion, and laughed,—I thought she would have done better to give her husband a good shaking,—and said it was very warm. Then she went to work again, to get through, so she said, before dark. But do my best, I could not lead the conversation to any explanation of the strange state of affairs, and Chris showed no disposition to take hold of the work himself.

When it was dark, Lotta led the two mules to their stalls, and then at last Chris condescended to rise and fasten the barn door. I was sure by their manner, and by Chris' expression when the subject was broached, that either he was outrageously lazy, or there was some odd explanation of his wife's doing so much of his hard work, while he sat idle. So I took pains, as I met one neighbor and another here and there about town, to make inquiries about Chris. And with one accord they all gave the same answer.

"Had Chris Tronsen a good reputation?"

"Yes, very good."

"Was he industrious and steady?"

"As hard-working and steady as any man in town."

"Did he treat his wife kindly?"

"There could be no doubt of it. He was as kind-hearted as he was hard-working."

"Then why," I would ask myself, "was his wife always plowing, or rubbing down mules, while he looked on and did nothing?"

This all happened in the spring and early summer. But it is only about a week ago now that I drove over to Chris' a one mild evening, to get some bags that I had lent him to use in carrying his grain to the elevator.

The year's work was over. The wheat was cut, threshed and sold. The barn had been buried anew in a mountin of fresh wheat straw, which filled the dooryard with its pleasant, fragrant smell. The mules were tethered and browsing near by.

Lotta and Chris were sitting together on the doorstep, talking over the year's work, no doubt, while the sun was setting in a bank of black clouds, from behind which streamed out a fire of crimson and gold.

After Chris had got the bags and thrown them into my light wagon, he and Lotta asked me into their little parlor, the walls of which were simply the inner side of the logs, fitted, closed and hewed smooth. There was a gay-colored carpet on the floor, and on the whole the room was quite cheery and comfortable, and we sat down in the twilight without a lamp. After we had talked for some time about the crops and prices, and the best way of banking up houses in winter, in which Chris was greatly interested, I said to Lotta:

"But you have worked almost as hard as Chris this year. You must be glad the summer is over."

Chris shifted uneasily in his seat. Lotta laughed.

"So now I shall tell why it was so, Chris," she said, looking at Chris.

He only nodded in silence. He apparently did not anticipate much pleasure from the recital.

"But no," said Lotta, "you shall tell those first part, and I shall tell those last part, that is how we shall do."

Chris appeared still more uneasy, and laughed nervously, but after a moment's hesitation, he plunged into his explanation of what I had so often wondered at.

"You haf seen me only lif here two year?" he asked.

"That is all," I said.

"Well, so this is all happen one year longer ago as that," he said. "Those time I lif alone in sod shanty, and Ruya and Oscar—those was the two mule, the last one named for king of Sweden and Norway, because he is so good—they lif in other sod shanty. I haf onerly twenty acres broke then, and ready for sow seed. Very few neighbor then. Onerly Mr. Knudt Qualley and Mr. Petersen near here. So then Mr. Jannsen, father of Lotta, he come to lif very near—onerly four mile away. And sometime I see Lotta on Sunday at meeting to Mr. Qualley's house, and sometimes I go to Mr. Jannsen's house to borrow somethings. Then I go there almost efery day to borrow somethings, and Mr. Jannsen say:

"'Mr. Tronsen, you lose great time to borrow somethings,' but I say I likes to ride so far to borrow somethings.

"And almost efery time it was Lotta what brought me those things what I came to borrow, and she tells me to come often. She say they always very glad to borrow me anythings."

"Now I can see," I said smiling, "why Lotta did not tell this part of the story."

"Oh, no," said Lotta, "it is not any reasons at all. Chris he knows why he did come so often to see my father, better as I do."

"Well," said Chris, continuing, "so those days I were very bashful, and I nefer dare to stay for talk with Lotta. Mr. Jannsen very good man," he added, in explanation, "but I rather talk to Lotta. But I always afraid, so I make believe go efery day to visit Mr. Jannsen, and borrow somethings. And Mr. Jannsen he think I was his very good friend. So he say one day, 'Chris, I nefer had any ones care so much for me before, like you does, and come so efery day to talk with me.' So when I sees Lotta I nefer knows what to say, and so I borrow knife, or nails, or shovel, and go right away. So one day, after I go away, I say to myself, 'Next time I shall go and I shall say, "I haf not come to see Mr. Jannsen, I have come to borrows somethings. I haf come to see Lotta, and I shall talk with Lotta."' But when next time comes, I cannot dare to say so. And I talks with Mr. Jannsen all times. So by-and-by I wants to ask Lotta to be married with me, and come and lif here after new house is built. But I could not dare to talk to her about that. Well, then, so I had saved up my money for long time, for build house. But Oscar—those mule named for king of Sweden and Norway—he die; those good old mule! Poor Oscar! And so I must go out and take those money, and buy new mule, so I buy white Yack."

An expression of actual misery settled on his face at this mention of white Jack, and it took him a moment to recover equanimity.

"Those dreadful mules!" he exclaimed, in continuation. "He eat and eat and eat. He eat his oats, he eat his hay, he eat his straw bed all night. But he would not lof to work. He lof to put his ears up straight, and stand up on front legs, or lie down and roll after those harness is on. Sometimes he lie right down in furrow and roll, and break harness. And fire put out his eyes. He are a dreadful mule. So I whip him some—not too much, I very kind," he added, at a reproachful look from Lotta—"and starve him—onerly starve him little bit, to make him feel for been cross. But all no good. He jump and bite and kick, and sometimes he will not do some works at all. So I could not tell what I should do. One day I is working in field near house, with both mules, and he stops and put up his old white ears. Then he throws his back heels clear up in the air. Then he just going to lie down, but I whip him—onerly a little, very easy. So he did not lie down. He onerly stand still. He stand still half an hour. First I try to pull him, but he sticks his hoofs in dirt and pull back. Then I try to coax him, but those fire come out of his eyes, and he snort and stand still. When I been got all discouraged, I saw Lotta going down those road on ox-team with little brother. Those oxes stop, and I go to road to see Lotta. So Lotta laugh and say—

"'Good morning, Mr. Tronsen. Why do you and mule stand still all times in field?'

"Then I say, 'I do not know; you must ask Yack.' Then Lotta say, 'Does those mule willing to work?' So I say, 'Those white mule, he will not work, he will onerly stand still. I haf pull him, and I haf push him, and he will not go.' So then Lotta say, 'Well, I think if I shall ask him to go, he will go. Mules and dogs and cats love me all times.'

"And I say, 'Well, I think he will too.'

"So she got off ox-team, and we go out to where Yack stand. Then she put her face on Yack's old white face, and rub his nose and talk to him little whiles, and make him believe he are very handsome and kind. So then she says:

"'Now, Yack, let me see you plow some furrow so nice.'

"So I take reins, and Yack start and work better as he nefer had work before, and she walk along and talk to him. And after she go away we feels very lonesome, but Yack he keep on and work hard all day. And that night I gif him more oats and big, soft bed. But he eat it all up, efery scrap. Well, he work very well for few days, and then he got bad some more. So efery time he got bad I drive him over to see Lotta. He always willing to go. And he be so ugly, and bite and groan, and stamp his feet, and wrinkle his nose. But after Lotta talk with him little whiles, and say he very handsome and how he must be good and work hard, he get so gentle, and run home very fast and be so good. But he likes to go and see Lotta too often. Sometimes he go efery day. If he cannot go to haf Lotta pat him and talk to him, he will not work. So when harvest time been come, I are very busy, I cannot go to see Lotta efery day. It were impossible. I tell Yack so, but it did'nt do some good at all. He should not work. He onerly bite, and wrinkle his nose and look ugly, and some fire come out of his eyes. And while he are ugly, those wheat must be cut, or it get spoiled. It are those whole year's work. It must not been lost. It ruin me to sit still in harvest, and not cut my wheat. But Yack would not work. He hate me, and almost eferybody. So one evening we went over to see Lotta about it. She came out to road to see Yack, and rub his nose, and pat him and tell him to work. And so I jes' tole her how it was. I tole how Yack he ugly all times and would not work, because he hate me. But if she talk to him and pat him, then he work. I tell her all about wheat, how it must been cut, I tell her I don't know what to do about it—and then I stop.

"So then she say she don't know what to do about it.

"So then I get very bold and say:

"'Lotta, I long time want to ask you to get married with me, but I too afraid you would laugh at me. But will you not come?'

"So she look down on ground, and poke little stone with her shoe, for long time, and by and by she say:

"'Perhaps, Chris, by-and-by.'

"'I haf want you to come for efer so long,' I said. 'But how can I wait now? Yack hates me. He will not work for me. I shall lose my wheat, for I can get no one to help me; they are all busy. So then I shall haf no money to build house, and we cannot get married at all.'

"Lotta poke the little stone with her foot some more, for long time, and look at ground. It been got very dark, and eferything so still and quiet.

"After awhile she say in very low voice:

"My father been say that Pastor Hofsen shall be at our house to see him, to-morrow.'

"That was all she say. Then after a minute she turn and run into house. So I talk some more with Mr. Jannsen, and tell him I want to borrow one thing more to keep always. He very much surprised. He say he always thought I come to see him, all those times.

"And next day,——'

"So if I do not tell the rest.' said Lotta, from her corner, 'I shall tell nothings. So we been got married those next day, when Pastor Hofsen come, and I came to here and feed Yack, and rub him down and lead him when he are cross, and he did work hard and saved all those wheat. He lof me very much, but when he are very cross, he will not work if Chris near him at all. Those times I drive him. I likes to drive Yack and plow. I plenty strong. Chris, he don't like it, but he can't help hisself. Nobody will buy Yack, and we cannot buy some other mule yet. But Yack are getting old. He haf lost two teeth this summer. So I hope when he is old he will not be ugly, but will get kinder like some old peoples, and then he will love me and love Chris too."

I confess I do not share Lotta's faith in Yack's reformation. But I thought the explanation of her working in the field now and then, while Chris sat idle, was a very good one.

Interesting Medical Cases.

Miss Matilda Anderson, a young woman who had been kept alive at the St. Paul (Minn.) hospital for six weeks by artificial respiration, died of congestion of the lungs. For forty-two days the nurses and house physicians of the hospital had been filling Miss Anderson's lungs with air by artificial means, first by raising and lowering the arms, and when that became painful by operating on the chest. By this method, however, the lungs were but partially filled at best, and had the nurses stopped even for five minutes Miss Anderson would have strangled and died. The young woman had become so used to the manipulation that she ate and slept almost naturally and could carry on a conversation. The young girl was a victim of a form of paralysis when received at the hospital, and when that disease was complicated with congestion of the lungs it was impossible to save her. The case has attracted the attention of many eminent physicians.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Caring for Wet Shoes.

When, without overshoes, you are caught in the rain, carefully remove all surface water and mud from the shoes as soon as they are taken off. Then while still wet, rub them with kerosene oil on the furry side of Canton flannel.

Set them aside until partially dry, and again apply the kerosene. They may then be placed in a moderately warm room and left to dry gradually and thoroughly.

Before applying French kid dressing or any polish give them a final rubbing with the flannel, still slightly dampened with the kerosene, and the shoes will be as soft and flexible as when new, and will be very little affected by their bath in the rain.

DUTY OF THE DOCTOR

QUESTION AS TO WHAT HE OWES TO THE PUBLIC.

No Doubt that Physicians Are Greatly Imposed Upon by Unscrupulous People—Say from 25 to 60 Per Cent. of Their Work Is Donated.

Night Calls Often Needless.

A question of considerable interest to the medical profession is coming up in the large cities as to the rules that should govern miscellaneous night calls. Some physicians, while not upholding a doctor in heartlessly weighing his fee in the balance with a human life, declare that doctors are imposed upon so often day and night by those able to pay for his services, but failing to do so, that he is justified in consulting his personal desires and comfort before answering a call. So much of a physician's work is practically charity, they say, that he is at liberty to use the same prudence about undertaking the work offered him by strangers that any other professional man is. Other physicians assert vehemently that every reputable doctor will answer any call, that it is part of his religion to be ever ready to succor the afflicted owing to the peculiar nature of his profession, and that it is not comparable to the stand that might be taken for a fee by an attorney or a man in any other business whose services might be sought by a stranger. They say that the emergency which usually exists when a doctor is called in the night should be sufficient incentive to him to respond to the call and take his chance of being paid later; that a case of life and death cannot wait until the morrow, as a lawsuit or any other business might.

Physicians of years of experience in general practice in Chicago make the startling statement that from 25 to 60 per cent. of a doctor's work is donated. Some physicians say about one-third of their time and experience goes for nothing, others place it at a quarter, and two declare that fully 60 per cent. was never paid for. Some of this work, of course, they know will not be paid for, that done at hospitals and for people who frankly confess their inability to meet the bill. But it is the other part that rubs. It is the bills of people who can and will not pay that make doctors shy about going out on night calls and increasing the annual percentage of cnarity work. It is well known that doctors donate a far greater percentage of their work than other professional men do. The medical charities of a great city like Chicago, says the Chronicle, are enormous in the aggregrate. The time that is donated by hundreds of doctors to hospitals and dispensaries is worth many thousands of dollars, and by many in the profession the claim is made that the doctors are far too liberal in this regard since the free dispensaries and hospitals are taken advantage of by people well able to pay for medical attendance, and thus the profession is cheated out of thousands of dollars every year.

In very many of the cases where doctors are called upon at night and urged to hasten to the bedside of a dying child such action would not be necessary had the parents of the child taken precaution to visit a dispensary the day before and secure what was necessary for the suffering little one. Complaints of a serious nature do not often originate at 2 o'clock in the morning. Very often when a doctor is thus called upon at night to render immediate aid with no fee in sight when he asks for the history of the case he learns the child has been ill for two or three days, but "it did not look serious and we didn't think we would need a doctor until to-night." Then at an early hour in the morning, after having had a few days in which to seek the free aid that is at their disposal, they call upon a professional man to leave his bed, with no prospect of remuneration, and attend the case of the child.

A favorite trick of panic-stricken families in an emergency, the doctors say, is to call up half a dozen doctors at once in order to be sure and have enough of them on hand. If a member of the family awakes the household with agonizing groans and a bad case of cholera morbus everyone decides he is going to die in half an hour, and someone rushes to the nearest telephone and calls up all the doctors in a radius of a mile. Neither knows the others have been called, but, anxious to save a life and with the appeal of the frenzied one still ringing in his ears, hastens to dress. Then he goes to a dark and cheerless barn and hitches a tired horse by the light of a lantern, and with the sleep still in his eyes is soon speeding toward the house. From other directions half a dozen other physicians are coming, but they are met at the door by a member of the household, who is "So sorry, but we couldn't wait, and Dr. Brown gave an injection of morphine and he's all right now."

A juncture where the physician feels decidedly chary of giving his services is in a case where a doctor has been in attendance on a patient for days and has prescribed a certain course of treatment by the family. But in the night the patient appears to become worse, his breathing becomes light or his pulse rapid and in alarm some member of the family rushes for the nearest doctor. He is told breathlessly at the door that a man is dying in the next block and unless he hurries a life will have slipped away. In nine cases out of ten the doctor will hastily dress, and without asking any more questions take his medicine case and start for the house. There he finds a table covered with bottles and pills and powders left by the other physician, and is told that they would have sent for the other doctor only he lives so far away. Of course that sort of thing does not tend to make a physician fall in love with night messages. He finds a case almost at his door which was passed over his head to a doctor in another part of town when the patient became ill, but when a crisis arises the family rushes to the nearest doctor, and in nine cases out of ten he is not paid for the call. After a few dozen of these experiences he is a little shy about chasing out into the night on a hurry call.

The majority of doctors, however, go on the principle that a physician's time is not his own, that he is enlisted in the cause of suffering humanity and should be ready at all times to render aid to the needy. These doctors for the most part are the younger generation who have not had so many hard knocks as their gray-bearded brethren and who are striving to build up a practice in the fierce competition which obtains in large cities. They insist that whoever calls on a doctor at any hour for aid should be answered at once. They look at the question from a humanitarian point of view more than a utilitarian, and openly say that the medical profession owes it to the public to be every ready to respond to a call.

That there is a great deal of injustice on the part of the public cannot be doubted, and it is also true that if the public would consider a physician not as a bounden servant, but as a professional man full of duties, and never infringe on his night leisure except in cases of real urgency, the man of medicine would always meet patients halfway. It is an error to suppose that a doctor is compelled to consider all calls. There is no law strictly covering the case, while many eminent physicians declare it to be a part of their religion to regard calls, whether they bring fees or not, as part of a bounden duty, they as well point to the fact that a failure to solve the problem of just when a physician should be required to give his time at unreasonable hours for nothing, has driven many persons out of the profession.

Kien Long and His Physicians.

There used to be related a curious anecdote of old Kien Long, emperor of China. He was inquiring of Sir George Staunton the manner in which physicians were paid in England. When, after some difficulty, his majesty was made to comprehend the system, he exclaimed:

"Is any man well in England that can afford to be ill? Now I will inform you," said he, "how I manage my physicians. I have four, to whom the care of my health is committed. A certain weekly salary is allowed them, but the moment I am ill the salary stops till I am well again. I need not inform you that my illnesses are usually short."—Harper's Round Table.

A BABY PREACHER.

Three-Year-Old Boy Who Is Conversant with the Bible.

Atlanta, Ga., boasts of a prodigy who is not yet 4 years old, but who has the reputation of being more conversant with the Bible than any one else in Georgia. The name of this youngster is Larney Lawrence Dennis and many are inclined to believe that he is gifted with supernatural powers. He says he has been sent to this world to preach the true gospel.

The child lives with his parents and every day his home is visited by persons to whom he preaches earnestly and calls upon them to follow in the footsteps of Christ. He is a light mulatto, but his appearance is more like a white than a colored boy. His hair is dark and flowing, while his eyes are blue. He does not play with toys like other children of his age nor has he any playmates.

Notwithstanding the fact that he has yet to learn his A B C's the youngster can engage in an interesting conversation, but it is his knowledge of the Bible that is the most marvelous of his accomplishments. He appears to be equally well posted in the old and new Testaments. The crucifixion, burial and resurrection of Christ, Christ's last visit on earth, the careers of the apostles and their different types of character, he can explain in a remarkably simple and direct manner, while other incidents of the Scripture which are not so well known to the average person seem to be thoroughly familiar to him.

SERMONS OF THE WEEK

Appreciation.—Sometimes we fancy we are not appreciated, but who of us is egotistic enough to say it is because we are too good. If so, let us mingle with people, and we will soon find our level.—Rev. C. L. Thompson, Presbyterian, New York City.

Paul.—Paul was a prophet, seer, preacher, orator, dramatist and poet. He was a more intense poet than Browning. Browning is the philosopher among poets; Paul the poet among philosophers.—Rev. Lyman Abbott, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Future of Gotham.—Greater New York must guard her honor, and woe, woe to him who would drag her good name down. Blessed be those, whether high or low, who consider citizens' duty as sacred as any God put upon them.—Rev. G. Gotthell, Hebrew, New York City.

The Poets.—Many of the latter-day poets, like Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell, were pronounced Unitarians, as were also many of their contemporaries in the world of science and history and statecraft.—Rev. M. J. Savage, Unitarian, New York City.

Kind Barbarians.—What are we going to do with our white brutal meanness when there is no Indian to lay it on to? The Indian is very convenient. The biggest scoundrels and cowards on earth are white and in full dress.—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver, Colo.

Walk with God.—Let us urge upon all professing Christians to walk with God, and so be prepared to meet with him—not to expect translation, because we are promised the presence of Christ in passing through the valley of the shadow of death.—Rev. John Hall, Presbyterian, New York City.

The Control of Satan.—Sin is an awful thing. It always works destruction, brings sorrow and leads to death. The only safe way is for men to dread sin as dangerous, because it strengthens evil habits, and puts the sinner under the control of Satan.—Rev. P. C. Curnick, Methodist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Money Power.—Many of the events which have altered the history of the world have had money as the leverage. The money power provoked the war of the Crimea, with all its attendant horrors; the money power provoked our own civil war.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

Woman's Tastes.—Woman's nature calls for certain things that man's nature does not call for so loudly. She needs tenderness and love, she is an admirer of the beautiful and the delicate, she ought and must have these yearnings of her nature gratified up to a certain degree, if she is to realize her destiny. Did you ever know a man to be desperately in love with a masculine woman? We want woman to be womanly, and if she is to be this she must not be denied those yearnings of her heart which constitute so large a part of her woman's happiness.—Rev. G. B. Vosburgh, Baptist, Denver, Colo.

War Against Liquor.—Death to the liquor traffic! Let that passionate purpose possess every Christian's breast. In the name of God, in the name of our home and in the name of and for the sake of our native land, let our cry be, "Death to the liquor traffic!"—Rev. P. Milburn, Methodist, Washington, D. C.

The Revelation of God.—The Universalist church does not say that you shall or shall not accept any or all that is contained in the Bible. It simply stands for the revelation of God, which is contained in the Bible, and for the truth as there laid down for human guidance.—Rev. C. H. Eaton, Universalist, New York City.

The Liberal Church.—People will not seek new religious fields when their wants are being met in the churches with which they have been long affiliated. The liberal church has served its purpose, its usefulness is gone, and in the natural order of things it must die out.—Rev. Col. Duncan, Salvationist, Chicago, Ill.

Short Lesson in Palmistry.

The girdle of Venus, indicated by a heavy line in the accompanying sketch of a hand, extends from a point between the first and second fingers to a point between the third and last fingers. It curves downward toward the wrist, often crossing the line of the heart or being united therewith. The girdle of Venus is a good sign in a good hand and a bad sign in a bad hand. It always shows its possessor to have great love and affectiin for the opposite sex. Those individuals in whose hands the girdle of Venus is clearly marked should guard themselves carefully to avoid trouble. Adventuresses usually have this line well developed, and no doubt Cleopatra's hand would have shown such a line even to the casual observer. Accompanied by a good thumb, a strong line of the head and a good life line, the girdle of Venus and its characteristics are desirable. But when the hand is weak the girdle is dangerous. When it is absept it indicates a person who has little feeling, especially if the line of the heart be weak.

The Minister's Salary.

Deacon Skinflint—We've failed again this year, Mr. Dominie. Can't raise half your salary.

Good minister—No matter. I have had myself appointed a missionary to the heathen, and will soon be in the pay of the Board of Missions.

Deacon Skinflint—Air ye goin' to Africa?

Good minister—No; I shall stay right here.—New York Weekly.

An ignorance of whist these days is regarded as an evidence of a very worthy woman.

Bad for Bronchitis

but extremely good for the sufferer from that harassing disease is Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. No medicine can compare with this great remedy in the prompt and permanent aid it gives in all bronchial affections. It stops the cough, soothes the irritated throat, and induces refreshing sleep.

"I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. One bottle cured me."
J. C. WOODSON, P. M.,
Poteet Hill, W. Va.

"A short time ago I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis, and neither physicians nor ordinary remedies gave me relief. In despair of finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle entirely cured me."
GEO. B. HUNTER, Altoona, Pa.

Quite a number of our patrons wish to pay their paper in wood. We need it now. Would prefer to have it split up enough so it can be used in our engine. About like coarse kitchen wood, and 18 inches long.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

There was a narrow escape from a disastrous conflagration at Alt Moody's residence last night. Milo Husselman was spending the evening there and was sitting on the couch holding Mr. and Mrs. Moody's daugter Lucile. He had been smoking and his cigar went out. Alt gave him a match and as he lit it the fiery brimstone flew into the fringe on the couch and in a moment's time was all a blaze. Lucile barely escaped having her hair burned. Alt picked up the couch to throw it out doors and it caught fast in the door. In trying to loosen it he burned his right hand in a horrible manner. The couch was completly ruined and also his carpets. It makes quite a loss to Mr. Moody as he carried no insurance.

ANNUAL MEETING

At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian church last evening, officers were elected as follows:

E. M. Fischler, W. C. Hartman and J. Y. W. McClellan for trustees; and the following were re-elected: Dr. S. B. Johnston, Chairman; John Otto, Elder; Mrs. J. A. Barns, treasurer. C. E. Emanuel, secretary. A considerable other business was transacted including arrangements for repairs of heater and other things needed. The membership of the church has increased during the past year, and its financial affairs are in a very satisfactory condition.

—Yesterday a mover's wagon went north through town, only stopping long enough to get supplies at Garrett's grocery. It looked very much like the one that went south through here about a month ago. It had the same sort of wagon cover and stove pipe sticking out, from which the smoke poured abundantly, showing there was a good fire within. A cow was tied to the wagon, and evidently had hoofed it a good ways. But the people inside were quite comfortable. Still there is no way of travel so good as the "steam cars."

COURT.

After the stormy and exciting sessions of the court for the past year, the present one seems tame. And though business is being called up rapidly, it is plain there is not the usual amount to be done. Still something may turn up to make it more interesting. The grand jury has been at work, but how much or what has been done, does not appear of course. Rob. McDougall swings the gad over these six men, as gracefully as he used to control the juveniles in a country school. Charley Crew still has charge of the court room, and as both these men fill their places well, and are worthy, we are pleased to see them hold the fort. So far it has been mostly routine work, as at the first of every term, such as the calling of cases, going through the docket to see as to the estates and guardianships, and work of that class. The trial jury will begin next Monday, we suppose.

There have been a few changes and improvements made in the court. During the vacation. Clerk Long, had the desk in the southeast room extended to the stairway, giving him more space to work in, and leaving as much as ever for the consultations and similar work of the attorneys, all of whom use this room for work that can be done out of the court room. Then from this room he had cut a door on the north so as to open into the room formerly used by the judges, for an office, but lately by the court reporter. This now makes a good library, and in here are put the books that formerly lumbered up the space at the judge's left on the platform near where he sits. This change is of itself a great improvement.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The election of officers of John C. Carnes Post, located at St. Joe, Indiana, took place Dec. 18. The following were chosen:—W. M. Abel Commander, Benj Hamilton S. V. C., David Andreas J V. DR. E. W. SHAFFER.

DR. E. W. SHAFFER WILL VISIT AUBURN

January 4th

TO TREAT CHRONIC DISEASES The Doctor comes to us indorsed by thousands of grate'ul patients whom he has cured ann relieved of suffering. He is a graduate of the best medical institutions and hospitals in the country, and has visited all the leading hospitals of Europe and his life-work has been devoted to learning how to cure diseses and relieve suffering humanity.

The Doctor Treats Only Chronic Diseases

He thoroughly understands those symptoms, causes and the nature of those many lingering and wasting diseases which cause premature and untimely deaths, or make life a burden for years. He cures hundreds of those cases that have been pronounced incurable over and over. He can tell you at a glance whether your case is curable or not—he only takes those cases that are curable.

Are You Afflicted? If you are, the Doctor invites you to call at the hotel and see him—learn why you are sick, what ails you and how you may be cured if indeed your case is curable.

Can You Afford To Be Sick?

Life is short, though we live to a ripe old age; if in good health, we enjoy life; if sick and suffering, then oft times life is not worth the living. then why not make One More Effort to Get Well? No matter how many physicians have treated you or how long you have been sick, or again, how often you have been told that your case is incurable, you, like thousands of others, may be cured. The Doctor cures diseases of the Nervous System, Lungs, Stomach, Kidneys, Bladder, Throat, Heart Blood and Skin Diseases, all those diseases peculiar to woman, and all private diseases, lost manhood, etc.

Consultation at the Swineford House FREE. Don't forget the date. Prices Reasonable.

DR. E. W. SHAFFER.

NOISE, bluster, feasting, drinking and horse play were the chief features of the old-time English Christmas. Gift-making existed as it had for many previous centuries, but that was merely an incidental feature and not nearly so important as the work of the pompous butler, upon whom devolved the responsibility of carrying into the dining-hall the great boar's head. What a bleak Christmas it would be nowadays if gift-making were secondary to bringing in a boar's head!

The old-time Christmas began a week before the arrival of the day, just as the shoppers of to-day rush out with fat purses to lure the holiday bargain. But purchasing gifts did not bother the heads or weary the bodies of the old world folks.

The gathering of the holly and mistletoe for the decoration of house and church was their initial task, and it was performed by the village en masse, headed by brave pipers and fiddlers, who filled the forests with the joyful melodies of Christmastide. It was the pagans who first used holly and mistletoe for observances, and the practice was adopted by the early Christian churches. The Greeks and Romans also used them in their religious ceremonies, as did the Druids and the Celtic and Gothic nations. So the young maid of to-day who stands alluringly under a sprig of mistletoe may find satisfaction in knowing that she is following the precedent of centuries.

In Druidical times the simple peasants flocked in crowds to join the processions, in which the Druidical priests were the foremost actors. The train was headed by the bards singing canticles and hymns. A herald preceded three Druids, furnished with implements for the purpose of cutting the mystic plant—upright hatchets of brass, fixed to staves. Then followed the prince or chief of the Druids, accompanied by all his flock and followers. The chief mounted the oak, with a golden sickle detaching the mistletoe, and presenting it to the priests, who received and bore the branches away with deep reverence. On the first day of the year, the branches, after resting on the Druidical altars in the interval, were distributed among the people as a sacred and holy plant, the Druids crying, "The mistletoe for the new year."

Many were the superstitions attaching to the mistletoe. Among the latter day charms associated with it, when suspended in a bunch in the servants' hall, was the traditionary and favorite observance of kissing the maids under its branches, the superstition prevailing that the maiden who missed being heartily kissed under her mistletoe at Christmas would forfeit her chance of early matrimony, and certainly not be married in the ensuing twelve months.

A medieval observance which always followed the gathering of holly and mistletoe was the cutting and hauling home of the Yule log. The favorite Yule log was a cross-grained block of elm, or the rugged root of a tree of fantastic and grotesque form, and this was drawn home to the kitchen, or great hall, with the same merry-making that attended the gathering of the holly. Before the crowning event of kindling the Christmas log from the charred remains of its predecessor of the year before, there were sports in plenty to be performed.

Oftimes these logs were directed to be provided by the lords of the manor. The furnishing of Christmas logs was a form of tenure; thus the cellarist of St. Edmundsbury held under the abbey the manor of Hardwick, and was bound by the conditions of his title to provide annually four Christmas stocks, each of eight feet in length.

Formerly the members of the family and guests sat down in turn on the Yule log, the throne of the master of the revels; sang a Yule song and drank to a merry Christmas and happy New Year. As part of their feast, Yule dough or Yule cakes were consumed. These bore impressed figures in the shape of an image; sometimes they were made in the form of an infant; nor was the manger overlooked.

Another employment for the log, ere its conflagration, was provided by the old Christmas gambol of drawing "Dun out of the mire," an ancient institution often mentioned. The Yule stock, drawn into the middle of the floor, became "Dun, the cart horse" for the nonce; the cry was raised that he had stuck in the mire. Two of the company, with or without ropes, advanced to extricate Dun. After various real and feigned exertions they called for more help, until all present were mixed up in the rough and tumble exertion. The fun arose from the horseplay of the revelers, falling about, and contriving to roll or drop the log on each other's toes. This was kept up with hearty enjoyment until, the fun being exhausted, "Dun was drawn out."

Of course the Christmas dinner was the leading feature of the day, and the big landowner was expected to entertain all of his tenants and neighbors from daybreak to midnight. The first dish to be placed on the table was the boar's head, and great state and ceremony marked this service. Musicians and trumpeters led the procession, in which there were huntsmen with long spears and pages with drawn swords. Carols were intoned as the procession moved into the dining-room and psalms were chanted, for in some ingenious way the olden time people connected the boar's head religiously with the celebration of the Holy Nativity.

ONE CHRISTMAS IN ATLANTA.

How It Was Observed by the Confederates After Sherman's Siege.

WHEN Sherman laid Atlanta in ashes in November, 1864, and started on his march to the sea, very few families were left in the ruined city. The inhabitants who had left during the siege seized the first opportunity of returning to their old homes. For weeks after the departure of the Federals the refugees straggled in every day. They came in ox carts, on horseback and on foot, bringing such provisions as they were able to carry. Every railway leading out of Atlanta had been torn up for many miles, and the wrecked city was almost inaccessible. The armies had destroyed every tree and fence for two miles around and firewood and coal were not to be had at any price.

The returning Atlantans were old men, boys, women and girls. The able-bodied young men were all at the front. These people saw a gloomy spectacle when they crossed the dismantled fortifications and looked down from the red hilltops upon the desolate scene below. They saw in the center of the city nothing but ash heaps and shattered walls. Only the churches and the town hall were left standing. It was impossible to locate the business streets under the mass of debris left by the falling walls. On the back streets and outskirts just 450 dwellings by actual count had been spared, and many of these had been badly damaged by shells.

And this was all that was left of Atlanta, the pride of the Confederacy, when her people returned and began their preparations for Christmas. The citizens crowded into every available house and shanty, and then came a hard struggle for fuel and food. The weather was intensely cold, and old people and delicate women and children had to walk two miles to the woods, and carry or drag home whatever they could find in the shape of firewood.

Horses, mules and negroes were too few in number to be of any material assistance. Several enterprising traders started small stores and sold flour, meal, sugar, coffee and bacon at tremendous prices. People paid $800 for a barrel of flour and $30 for a pound of coffee. Other things were equally high.

Some of the citizens had plenty of Confederate money and they were able to pay any price for what they needed, but there were hundreds of families whose fathers and husbands were in the army, and these would have starved but for the thoughtful kindness of their more fortunate neighbors. Perhaps a few starved or froze to death. Nobody knows. There were no newspaper reporters in those days taking notes in that metropolis of smoking ruins.

Christmas Day dawned with a blood red sun glaring through the hazy atmosphere. It was a dreary holiday for the little ones. There were no toys, no candy and fruit, and very few presents were made. If a family succeeded in keeping up a good fire all day it was considered a piece of good fortune. A baked hen for dinner was a luxury, but there was not a turkey within fifteen miles.

The children made the best of it with their outdoor games, and a small supply of corn whisky enabled some of the citizens to get through the day with a show of festive cheer. The wounded and sick soldiers were thought of and provided for first. The Southern people never forgot their boys in gray, and it was a point of honor with every man, woman and child to divide their last dollar or their last crust with the men who followed Lee and Johnston.

The streets, or rather, the pathways, between the ash heaps, were filled with men and boys who put on the appearance of jollity, but the old men who laughed and joked the loudest were wondering how their sons fared that day in their camps in far-off Virginia.

Was there ever such a Christmas Day on this continent? It may be a blessed thing that men forget such dark chapters in their history. There are to-day wealthy and happy people in Atlanta, living in fine mansions, who shivered in rags over a few embers in little huts made of scraps of old tin roofing on that never-to-be-forgotten Christmas just after the siege.

Decorations.

The use of holly and mistletoe, the plants sacred to Christmas, is now very general, and as they are abundant in our markets, as well as cheap, every household may be made bright with them. In parlors and sitting rooms, wreaths, crowns and festoons can be arranged over mantels and windows, as well as hung from lamps and over pictures.

For the Christmas dinner table, a large bowl of holly leaves, with the scarlet and white berries, makes a beautiful center piece; while tiny bunches of holly laid at each plate brighten the table wonderfully. Cakes may be ornamented with candy designs of holly, while ices may be molded and colored in the same style. If in remote localities it is not possible to obtain holly and mistletoe, green of some other variety should be procured. All-over greens, such as pine and cedar, can be utilized, and bittersweet and Indian arrow berries arranged with these can be made into beautiful decorations. When chrysanthemums are yet blooming, they add greatly to the beauty of the table; the bright yellow and dark crimson are particularly appropriate for the Christmas dinner table.

In arranging the table, the cakes, bonbons, nuts and fruits may be placed on it at the beginning, and will give it a festive appearance, rendering very little additional decoration necessary.

The Church Christmas Tree.

"The Christmas tree should be a spruce or fir if possible, with full and regular boughs," says Mrs. Lyman Abbott, writing of "Christmas in the Church," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The dressing of it is a matter of taste. But for the danger attending it every one would wish to have the tree brilliant with lighted candles. In city churches electric lights may be used with good effect. In an account of a German Christmas tree, written by S. T. Coleridge, it is said that the great yew bough was fastened to the wall, adorned with candles, and when the candles had burned down and the needles of the yew began to sputter and burn the delight of the children was unbounded. It was apparently the intention that the bough should burn as a culmination of the enjoyment. But that is not desirable now, so every precaution should be taken to avoid it. A pan of water should stand near, and at least two tall persons should be provided with a pair of tongs, upon the ends of which wet sponges are securely fastened. A small blaze can in this manner be immediately quenched."

Santa's Little Joke.

"Paradoxical—" A smile flitted over his face and hid itself in the suburbs of his snowy beard. "—though it may sound—" Again he glanced at the new-fangled, smokeless chimney. "—I like this because it doesn't soot me." Apologizing to himself for taking such liberties of pronunciation with the English language, Santa Claus smiled again and proceeded with his work.—New York World.

SANTA CLAUS—"OH, RING OFF AND LET'S GO HOME."

Error as to Christ's Birth.

Through the erroneous time fixed by the calculations of Dionysius, the nativity of Our Lord took place four years earlier than the generally assigned date, for it must have precided the death of Herod, who died four years before the beginning of the Christian era. After giving data upon which the later computation is founded, Farrar, in his "Life of Christ," adds: "Under no circumstances can it have taken place later than February, B. C. 4."

And then with the Nativity itself, the "wise men" rightly claim our attention. But why the traditional number 3? There is no Biblical authority for fixing any number at all to the Magi of the Gospel narrative. St. Matthew, the only evangelist who mentions them, says: "There came wise men from the east to Jerusalem." The idea that they were three in number no doubt is founded upon the three kinds of gifts they offered—gold, frankincense and myrrh; at least, this was the teaching of St. Augustine.

Sambo's Christmas Pudding.

Smoking pudding, trimmed with holly,
Enough to make poor Sambo jolly;
He thinks of the plums that hide within,
And shows his teeth with a lively grin.

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

Good morning, dearest comrades. We Little Merry Timers three
Tra-la-la tra-la-la era-la-la!
Have come to wish all of you may
Be happy on this Christmas day.
And now, that we have had our say,
Good-bye, we'll quickly slip away.
Tra-la-la tra-la-la tra-la-la!

SAVED BY HIS WIFE

A Hard Times Christmas Story.

LEFT HIS WATCH.

TIMES were hard in the country as well as in the great cities. A couple married but a few years, who had lost everything through illness and misfortune, decided to remove to Chicago before winter set in to try to secure some sort of employment that would yield a living. The husband had been an accountant and office man and the wife had a good general knowledge of and experience in office work.

They rented a suite of cheap rooms, and then followed days and days of weary seeking, almost a house-to-house canvass of the downtown district, leaving applications wherever the managers would permit.

"We can't give you any encouragement in these times; we are not taking on any new men. Our business will not warrant keeping all of our old employes after the holiday season is over. Your references are all right, and if times were different," etc.

And when Sunday came there was scurrying for stationery and for stamps out of the thin purse to answer "ads." But one day was like another, with its trudging, trying and waiting.

The purse became empty and the meals scanty, and the rent due; and after the first month the furnace sent up little heat and the landlady's "Good morning" was frigid. They wore shabbier clothes, and their steps grew heavier as their faces grew less hopeful. One night the husband came home without his cuff buttons, and next morning wore a pair of his wife's, but there was steak and coffee for supper. In a few days he left his watch downtown and wore an old-fashioned silver one that had been his father's; and then they decided they could get along without that, too. And there was nothing more to pawn. The man several years before had helped a lawyer out of a tight place, loaning him small sums several times. He dropped in to see him and asked him for a dollar or two. The lawyer stepped out to get the money and forgot to come back.

The wife had packed two pieces of rare French bric-a-brac in her trunk, and if she could sell them—in a great city there were always people who were glad to get hold of artistic curios, if you could find the right people.

The pieces of china were worth from $50 to $100, but husband and wife agreed to part with them for $25 if a purchaser could be found. A curio dealer downtown offered her $1.50. The wife next started to visit houses on a fashionable boulevard; and was either denied admittance by a haughty servant or a supercilious dame refused even to look at the pieces—the like of which could not be found outside an art museum. She never bought from peddlers, she explained. Then a long, weary walk home, and only bread and tea for supper.

For two or three Sunday nights they had attended Rev. Dr. D——'s church. Besides being a most learned and eloquent preacher, Dr. D—— appeared to them a man of large heart, kindly impulse and intense sympathies, whose whole personality beamed with love and kindliness. The little woman hopefully decided to go to this minister and ask his assistance; surely in so large and wealthy a church the pastor would know of some philanthropically inclined parishioner who would be glad to help a struggling fellow creature, as well as to acquire the beautiful objects of art.

She called at the residence of Dr. D——. In a few words she told him her story. He stood, glasses in hand, impatient for her to finish, not asking her to sit. Then he replied: "I am sorry, but I can do nothing," and opening the door, almost pushed her out.

The little woman came to me. I could not buy, but I gave her some names of women of my acquaintance who I thought could help her. Among them was Mrs. R——, a frivolous, newly married woman who had never been suspected of ever having a sober, serious impulse, but who was warm-hearted and lovable, and happened to be first on my list. With this I dismissed the matter for a time from my mind. I chanced to call on Mrs. R—— some time after, and saw in the drawing room an antique empire cabinet surmounted by a bust of Napoleon and inside the identical Sevres.

I curbed my curiosity until the other visitors were gone and then, over a cozy cup of tea, asked and heard the story.

"It was one day last week," said Mrs. R——. "George was home to luncheon and brought papa with him, and then they were going to a directors' meeting—do have a rose leaf; Fred sent them from New York—of some new company they have just organized. Papa is president and there's ever so much capital behind it. Don't you like the flowers? Try a nougat. Of course, they were talking business, and when some one came I was glad to get out and let them finish alone.

"Here was this pitiful little woman, quite handsome at one time, I should say, but faded and out of style. Why, I knew she was in trouble before she spoke. Yes, and when she showed me that china—I told her I didn't need any dishes, but if there was anything else I coud do——. Just then papa came in, and in a minute he was wild; he didn't see the lady or anything else, but just those dishes. 'Why, he cried, and he examined the painting. When he had finished his ecstasies I explained the lady wished to sell it. He was aghast. To sell such a treasure for $25 was rank robbery. 'Why, don't you know they are priceless?' he exclaimed.

"I never saw anything get the better of papa's business judgment before. He asked how she came to want to part with them, and she told us, oh, the most pitiful story! Her husband was out of employment and they had suffered everything for months—didn't have enough to eat, I suppose. I never knew that kind of refined people could get so poor. Papa bought the china for part of my Christmas gift. And George gave her an address and told her to have her husband call at the office in the morning. I never was so happy in my life. After the men and the little woman were gone I had a good cry. I was in the midst of it when Dr. D—— called, and, of course, I had to tell him why I was crying and everything. He was so interested and he had a curious look on his face, and said: 'Thy ways are not our ways. Mrs. R——, your father is the best man I ever knew.' And you know papa isn't a church member at all; hardly ever goes to church.

"He's a very able man, the little woman's husband, George says. They put him into the office of the company and think of making him manager after the first of the year. He told George that his wife is all that saved him in his trouble, and she sees good in it all and says their trials only made them nearer to each other and that I won't know what love is until trouble comes and we fight it down together. We've talked of it since. It's curious how she happened to come to us. It seems as if something must have sent her at last, doesn't it?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

To Santa Claus.

Sir, it stirs my indignation to the very highest pitch
To observe your plutocratic inclination toward the rich.
Why should all the costly presents in the silken stockings fall
While the lad who has no stockings never gets a gift at all?
In distributing your favors do you think it's really fair
To discriminate against the child whose little legs are bare?
If you really are beneficent put first upon your list
The poor but patient youngsters whom you heretofore have missed.

Boy Wanted.

Excuse me, pray, I've just stepped in a moment for to say
I'm likely to be overworked this coming Christmas day.
There are so many children in this great big world of ours,
I am afraid the work ahead will overtax my powers.
So I would ask the little lads to whom this message comes
Those only who believe in me—with whom I'm always chums—
If there's a not one among 'em all to whom 'twould be a joy,
On Christmas morn to come and be old Santa's errand boy.
—Harper's Bazar.

A Proper Receptacle.

Cedric—Are you going to hang up your stocking Christmas eve, Tommy? Tommy—No; I've got enough feet. I'm going to hang up my pocket.—Harper's Young People.

The Proportions.

It is a rule, somewhat severe
But true as Deuteronomy;
There's just one month of Christmas cheer,
And eleven of economy

A NEW YEAR'S SONG.

THE world is full of mystery,
Which no one understands;
What is before our eyes we see
The work of unseen hands;
But whence and when and why they wrought
Escapes the grasp of human thought.

There was a time when we were not,
And there will be again,
When we must cease and be forgot,
With all our joy and pain—
Gone like the wind, or like the snow
That fell a thousand years ago.

We live as if we should not die,
Blindly, but wisely, too;
For if we knew that death was nigh
What would we say or do,
But fold our arms and close our eyes,
And care no more who lives or dies.

If death to each man in his turn
Is coming soon or late,
Be ours the soldier's unconcern,
And his courageous fate;
Better to perish in the strife
Than to preserve the coward's life.

New Year, if you were bringing youth,
As you are bringing age,
I would not have it back; in sooth,
I have no strength to wage
Lost battles over. Let them be;
Bury your dead, O memory!

You can bring nothing will surprise,
And nothing will dismay,
No tears again in these old eyes,
No darkness in my day.
You might bring light and smiles instead
If you could give me back my dead.

I have beheld your kin, New Year,
Full fifty times, and none
That was so happy and so dear,
I wept when it was done.
Why should we weep when years depart,
And leave their ashes in the heart?

Good-by, since you are gone, Old Year,
And my past life, good-by!
I shed no tear upon your bier,
For it is well to die.
New Year, your worst will be my best—
What can an old man want but rest?
—Richard Henry Stoddard.

CHRISTMAS IN THE COUNTRY.

Forty Years Ago It Was Observed Differently from What It Is Now.

CHRISTMAS in the country forty years ago was a different affair from what it is now, says a writer. I never think of Christmas in those days without thinking of a lovely winter day, bright with sunshine and snow everywhere; large drifts, through which the horses floundered as they drew the stout old sled, on which was the wagon-bed filled with hay, and covered with blankets and buffalo robes, where we cuddled down, as we rode merrily away to spend Christmas at grandpa's. We could hardly wait till the horses stopped, so eager were we to wish grandpa a merry Christmas; but he was generally ahead of us with his greeting of "Christmas gift." That entitled him to a present instead of us; but a kiss all around was usually the way we paid off our indebtedness, while some striped sticks of peppermint candy, laid up for the occasion, were given us. Our aunts, uncles and cousins came next for their share of good wishes and merry jokes.

A bright fire burned in the fireplace, and there, suspended by a stout string from the ceiling, was a great turkey packed full of dressing, and sending forth a most delicious odor as it turned round and round, gradually browning before the fire, the juice dripping into a great pan on the brick hearth; and from this pan grandma occasionally dipped the juice with a huge iron spoon and poured it over the crisp sides of the turkey. Other preparations were going on meanwhile in the kitchen, where a cooking stove held the place of honor, as cooking stoves were very rare in those days. The neighbors had come miles to see it, and express their fears as to the probability of its "blowing up." This cook stove, however, was not equal to cooking such a large turkey in its small oven. A coffee boiler sent out an odor of coffee strong and fragrant, while a long table covered with snowy linen (the work of grandma's own hands) stood at the farther end of the long kitchen.

As soon as the turkey was pronounced done and the gravy made in the dripping pan, the chairs were placed near the table and we were called to dinner. No one was left to wait, and such a merry time! After grandpa had asked a blessing on the food, he carved the turkey and supplied our waiting plates bountifully with any piece we wished, together with all manner of good things in the way of vegetables. A rice pudding with plenty of raisins, pumpkin pies and rosy cheeked apples served for dessert, and our only sorrow was that we could eat so little. After dinner we children played games in the kitchen, around the fireplace that was used when there was no fire in the cook stove. Here we popped corn, cracked nuts, told fairy stories and played blind man's buff while the older ones "visited" in the "keepin' room" until the time came to return home.

St. Nicholas Day in Holland.

In some houses the little children who go to bed early put out their shoes and stockings and find them crammed with presents in the morning. Others have to play a game of hide-and-seek for their presents, which the father and mother have hidden in the most mysterious manner and in out-of-the-way places. In a great many families, however, Dec. 5 is celebrated by sending and receiving parcels in the evening of that day. "Parcels" must be taken here in a very broad sense. The servant who has to answer the bell is obliged to bring in whatever is put into her hands or before her, and consequently is often heard to giggle behind the door of the room in which the whole family is assembled. Then in walks—nay, is put—a most extraordinary looking gentleman or old lady, or a queer animal, consisting chiefly of wood or of linen, filled with sawdust, in which the present, sometimes one of very small dimensions, lies concealed. Funny little rhymes often accompany the parcels; and generally much good-natured teasing is contained in the poetical lines. The patience of some people is often sorely tried by a parcel consisting of a big ball of very fine cotton, which has to be unwound to get at the present.—St. Nicholas.

What Is the Inference?

"Is your cousin a pretty girl?" "Well, she never thinks it necessary to hang up mistletoe at Christmas."—Judge.

He—"I suppose if your father found me here he would kick me out of the door?" She—"Oh, I don't know; papa's punting is wretched."—Detroit Journal.

Chorus of Excited Voices—"Heavens! A boat wrecked, you say? And none of its occupants escaped?" Life-Saver (grimly)—"Only the fellow who rocked it."—Truth.

Jill—"Is Gill a good judge of cigars?" Bill—"I think he must be. He had two last night and he gave me one. He must have kept the best one."—Yonkers Statesman.

A bald-headed man fainted the other day from the heat. He was very indignant, when he was reviving, at hearing a Cockney exclaim, "Give him hair—give him hair!"

"The horse has another point of superiority over the wheel." "What is it?" "When a horse is getting ready to shy at anything, you can tell it by his ears."—Chicago Record.

Hall—"What are you doing now?" Gall—"Oh, I'm making a house-to-house canvass to ascertain why people don't want to buy a new patent clothes-wringer."—Chicago News.

"Darling," he cried, "I cannot live without you." "But," she replied, "my father is bankrupt." "In that case," he despondently replied, "I guess I'll go and shoot myself."—Chicago News.

Teacher—"Don't any of you know how to find mountains on the map? Now, look at this map of Alaska. What is that row or chain of dark, round spots?" Class (in chorus)—"Nuggets!"—Puck.

Alice—"What a gallant person Mr. Dunkley is. He never addresses me without beginning 'Fair miss.'" Dorothy—"Oh, that's force of habit. He used to be a street-car conductor."—Cleveland Leader.

Bowery Bill—"Say, young feller, you ought to stop smokin' cigarettes. Dey ain't good fer yer." Chelly—"W-why not?" Bowery Bill—"Look how nervous yer get just 'cause a gen'l'man asks yer fer a light."—Puck.

Teacher—"Well, Jane, what is your father's business?" Jane—"He's a collector, mum." Teacher—"And for whom does he collect money?" Jane—"He doesn't collect money. He's a collector of rags."—Boston Ideas.

She—"But surely you believe that the sins of the father are visited on the children?" He—"Rather. My governor promised to let me have a fiver this morning; but he lost it at poker last night, so I didn't get it!"—Punch.

"Boswell," said Dr. Johnson, meeting the biographer on the street, "I have been reading your manuscripts. There is a great deal about yourself in them. They seem to me to be Youmoirs rather than Memoirs."—Puck.

She—"If you could have one wish, what would it be?" He—"It would be that—that—oh, if I only dared to tell you what it would be!" She—"Well, go on. Why do you suppose I brought up the wishing subject?"—Chicago News.

Mrs. Porkley—"I often wonder how people manage to understand each other in France." Mrs. Gotham—"How absurd." Mrs. Porkley—"Well, both my daughters speak French, and they can't understand each other."—Up-to-Date.

Proprietor (average hotel)—"Very sorry, sir, but you will have to leave this house at once." Guest—"Goodness me! What have I done?" Proprietor (solemnly)—"You said something to a waiter which has displeased the cook."—Yellow Book.

Lady (interviewing housemaid)—"Why did you leave your last place?" Housemaid—"Because the master kissed me, mum." Lady—"And you didn't like it, eh?" Housemaid—"Oh, I didn't mind it, mum, but the mistress didn't like it!"—Fun.

Miss Quickstep—"What part of town are we driving through, Mr. Fibble?" Fweddy—"I haven't the least idea." Miss Quickstep—"I was aware of that. Still, I thought it possible you might know what part of town we are driving through."—Chicago Tribune.

Miss Ancient Wantiman (suddenly awakening)—"I see you have my pocket-book; but there's very little money in it compared with what I have in bank." Burglar (gruffly)—"Well, there ain't no way to git that!" Miss Ancient Wantiman—"H'm! Are you a single man?"—Puck.

"Borus, in your last novel you spoil the story by raising an insurmountable barrier between the hero and heroine, who certainly ought to have married each other." "I couldn't help it, Naggus. My wife insisted that I was the hero of the story myself, and she got jealous of the heroine."—Chicago Tribune.

Spitzbergen Hotel

The hotel recently erected in Spitzbergen is thus described: Built in Norwegian style, it has a large hall, and a quantity of smaller rooms, with thirty beds. It is also provided with a book for visitors' names, among which may now be seen those of Sverdrup, Fulda, Prince Hohenlohe-Schillingsfuerst, E. Vely, and others. The climate of Spitzbergen is said to have the most favorable influence on persons suffering from chest diseases.

The Public Schools

About Compositions.

The average pupil hates compositions. Why? Before trying to answer this question, let us state and illustrate a principle: People, old and young, like to do whatever they can do well, and dislike to do whatever they do badly. The person who can't drive his ball through the first arch invariably "hates croquet;" not so the chap who plays his own and his partner's ball through arch after arch, while his discouraged opponents stand round despairingly waiting for their chance to play. So it is in everything else—it is always the skillful who comprise the enthusiasts.

Now in the matter of compositions: Once get a child to feel that he is doing his work well, and you have won the victory. He won't "hate compositions" any more. Generally, too much is expected of the pupil at the start, and in most cases the start is not made soon enough. The difficulty about compositions is nearly always in the case of the children to whom the matter comes as a new and unfamiliar task. Teachers who have to do with such pupils should be sure, first, to set the composition task well within the pupil's powers; and, second, to choose the subject of the composition from among those things that have for the pupil a living interest. Instead of asking a girl of 14 to write on such subjects as "The Advantages of Industry," "Our Duty to Our Parents," "The Value of Education," etc., have her describe the last picnic she attended, write on the proper care of a canary bird, or give her own ideas as to the culture of pansies. A boy who will play hookey in order to avoid writing a composition on "The Uses of Politeness," "The Character of Washington," or "True Manhood," will jump at a chance to write about "Catfish and How to Catch Them," or to give an account of the different kinds of kites, or to write about any other thing that he knows about and takes an interest in.

It is well not to be too critical about the compositions. Pass over defects lightly, and heartily praise every indication of originality. Allow pupils to read their compositions publicly, as a special mark of favor, not as a requirement. Above all, never require pupils to write compositions as a punishment, or force them to read their productions before the school, unless you want to have them hate composition writing forevermore.—Learning by Doing.

Will Meet in Washington.

The Executive Committee of the N. E. A., at its meeting in Chicago, decided, by a unanimous vote, to select Washington as the place for the next meeting of the National Educational Association, and the time, July 7, to 13, inclusive. The choice was a matter of no little difficulty, owing to the very strong attractions offered by the competing cities, viz., Omaha, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles. Already the railroad lines from Chicago to Washington have granted the usual one fare for the round trip, plus the membership fee. Formal action as to ticket conditions and extensions of tickets for return will be announced at an early date. It is believed that these ticket conditions will be more liberal than have ever before been secured. The meetings will open on the evening of Thursday, July 7, and close on the evening of Tuesday, July 13. The advantages of this arrangement are that Sunday travel to or from the meeting will be unnecessary. There will be no session on the afternoon and evening of Saturday, the time being given to social and other recreations.

The churches of Washington will be invited to arrange for sermons and addresses bearing upon educational themes on Sunday, the 9th. It is believed that this relief of Saturday afternoon and Sunday occurring in the midst of the session will be welcome.

Hints to Teachers.

Don't give up the boy who sits in the back seat and wears his coat collarless, his hair worn a la Pompadour, and his finger nails in mourning—who won't learn his lessons, and who will get into mischief. I knew a teacher who had a pupil just like him. She showed interest in him; she visited his parents, and didn't act as if their language and manners made them devoid of all fine feeling. She asked him to help her about some work after school one night, and said, "By the way, John, we know each other pretty well now. I like you and I hope you like me. I want you to do something for me, will you?"

"If I can," was the answer.

"Come to school to-morrow with a collar, comb your hair nicely, and pare your finger-nails. You see I like you as you are now, but I want other people to like you too, and they won't if you are careless about your appearance."

Do you think the boy hated her? No. He was never seen untidy after that evening. He graduated from the high school with honors, and is to-day filling a responsible position in society. He swears by that teacher. She made a man of him.—Selected.

Overwork in Schools

The evils resulting from overwork in the public schools of Switzerland have attracted the attention of the educational authorities, and a series of propositions for combating these evils have been under consideration. The proposed changes were submitted under the authority of an eminent physician, who is also an expert in school hygiene. One of the recommendations is that children be not sent to school until they have passed the age of 7. Other propositions are to limit the studies in the primary schools to reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, singing and gymnastics; to do away with home study; to give the pupils frequent intermissions and vacations, and to mitigate greatly the rigor of examinations. The tendency in every enlightened country is to call a halt on the crowding of young pupils in their studies.

A Building at Omaha.

The Woman's Board of the Bureau of Education of the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition proposes to erect a building upon the grounds to be known as "The Girls and Boys' Building." To secure this building, with its furnishings and accessories, the Woman's Board must have the co-operation of all the girls and boys of the West. Shares will be 5 cents each, and every child is asked to take at least one share. Individuals or schools taking twenty or more shares will receive a handsome certificate giving a picture of the building; while individuals, schools or counties subscribing for 200 shares will have mention on roll of honor, which will be placed in the building.

Baby Has Gone to School.

The baby has gone to school. Ah me!
What will the mother do,
With never a call to button or pin
Or tie a little shoe?
How can she keep herself busy all day
With the little hindering thing away?

Another basket to fill with lunch,
Another "Good-by!" to say,
And mother stands at the door to see
Her baby march away,
And turns with a sigh that is half relief
And half a something akin to grief.

She thinks of a possible future morn
When the children, one by one,
Will go from their home to the distant world
To battle with life alone.
And not even baby be left to cheer
The scattered home of that future year.

She picks up the garments here and there
Thrown down in careless haste,
And tries to think how it would seem
If nothing were displaced.
If the house were always as still as this
How could she bear the loneliness?

Educational Notes.

Of the twenty-seven royal families of Europe, two-thirds are of German origin.

A law school under the control of the University of Maine is to be opened in Bangor in 1898.

The attendance at the University of Utah, Salt Lake City is the largest in the history of that institution.

The Northwestern University of Evanston, Ill., the largest denominational school in the country, has 2,900 registered students.

The letters in the various alphabets of the world vary from 12 to 202 in number. The Sandwich Islanders' alphabet is 12, the Tartarian 202.

For twenty-six years young women have enjoyed the fullest freedom in the University of Michigan, and now there are about 600 of them in various departments.

Philadelphia has selected thirty men and five women to act as truant catchers at $2 a day. It is also to provide its high school with the largest triple telescope in the world.

A step in the right direction has been taken in securing a woman physician for the new girls' high school in New York City. She will teach physiology and will also give attention to the physical needs of the young women. Dr. Frieda Lippert is the appointee.

Harvard University seems to be desirous of placing itself in active contact with the teachers in the surrounding cities, and for that purpose contemplates the establishment of courses of lectures dealing with the subject-matter taught in the different schools. A course of ten lectures will be given on methods of teaching the following subjects: Chemistry, physical geography, physics, mathematics, botany, zoology and physiology.

The public schools of the city of St. Louis are endowed in an unusual manner. The School Board controls real estate comprising 295 acres, valued at $1,500,000, and from which it derives an annual revenue of $70,000 in ground rents. When the United States acquired the possessions of Spain certain lots in St. Louis which had been set apart as commons by the original settlers were reserved for the support of public schools, and as the city grew upon the site of the small settlement the lands became of much importance.

Breeds Blooded Horses.

Out in Idaho is a woman who breeds blooded horses for a living. Her name is Miss Kittie Wilkins, and she owns a ranch near Mountain Home. Besides being famous as a breeder she has also gained renown for her daring and reckless riding on the plains. Miss Wilkins is as brown as a berry from constant exposure to the sun, wind and rains. She says her horses this season have done remarkably well, and that she is beginning to see the results from importing Longitude, the pacer, with a 2:13 record, and Parallel, with a trotting record of 2:18, to her ranch. The colts are all showing up well and give promise of becoming the best all-purpose driving horses ever shipped from the range.

Miss Wilkins says that she has visited every market in the United States of any consequence. She does not expect to bring any of her horses to Eastern or Northern markets this year, as there is no demand at the present time for a Western-bred horse, no matter how good. Under ordinary conditions there is a strong demand for the Western horse in the South, and she expects to send the bulk of her animals to St. Louis, Kansas City and New Orleans. Miss Wilkins says she has just an even 1,000 horses to put on the market this season.

Preacher Much Too Wicked.

Once a clergyman of considerable eminence, but sensational proclivities, volunteered to write anonymously for the Sun. In his first article he made the amazing blunder of trying to adapt himself to what he supposed to be the worldly and reckless tone proper to a Sunday newspaper. Mr. Dana chuckled quietly and sent the manuscript back, after indorsing it, in blue pencil, "This is too —— wicked."

AUSTRIA'S THRONE TOTTERING.

Nothing but Emperor Francis Joseph's Popularity Prevents Dissolution.

It seems as though the dual empire of Austria-Hungary is on the eve of dissolution. The scenes that have occurred in the Reichstag in Vienna and Prague, the capital of Bohemia, point to no other end. In the parliamentary body men were insulted and assaulted and forced to draw knives in self-defense. The ministry was kicked out of power and the premier, Badeni, forced to flee from the capital. Through back streets and in a closed cab he was driven to the depot, where he took a train for his native Galicia, narrowly escaping from the crowd that had assembled to murder him.

BADENI.

In Prague rioting was carried on and stores and private houses looted. Men by the score were killed and hundreds wounded by the soldiery who were called out to quell the disturbances.

Occurrences such as these can have no place in a well-ordered empire and no empire can endure long with one part of its citizens making war upon the other. Hence the conclusion, that the dual empire seems on the eve of dissolution.

EMPEROR FRANCIS JOSEPH, OF AUSTRIA.

The question of language lies at the bottom of the whole difficulty. There are some 40,000,000 people in the empire and they speak twenty different languages. Theoretically, the official language is German, but each race speaks its own tongue and refuses to learn the language of any other. Between these different peoples there is nothing in common. There is no national feeling, no patriotism, no belief in the empire. Each race struggles for the preservation of its own tongue and a bitter feeling against the Germans and Germanizing influences exists everywhere in the empire. The Germans are a minority in Austria-Hungary, but they have had parliamentary control for years and their aim has been to still further Germanize the empire.

Some time since the premier, Badeni, issued an order permitting the use of the vernacular tongue in the different parts of the empire. The Germans resented this and in the Reichstag they adopted the most barbarous tactics to bring about the fall of the premier. Personal assaults were made on members, and free fights were daily indulged in. Finally Badeni had to go.

The methods adopted by the Germans made the Slavonian and anti-German influences flame into fury. The Czechs of Bohemia, who for hundreds of years have struggled to maintain their language and their racial characteristics, almost revolted. In Prague they attacked Germans and Jews—whoever, indeed, could not speak Czech—sacked homes and openly faced the troops sent against them. Although peace—military peace—now reigns in Prague the anti-German feeling is as bitter as ever and the same spirit of resistance to German aggression exists throughout the empire. Nothing, indeed, save the personal popularity of the Emperor Francis Joseph prevents an open revolt. It may not prevent it long. Bohemia, which has suffered under Germanizing influence until much that was distinctively Bohemian is now destroyed desires the breaking up of the empire. She wants to make it a triple empire, holding a co-ordinate place with Austria and Hungary.

Meantime the latter kingdom is shrewdly watching the developments. Within a year her compact with Austria will expire and she will find herself in a position of almost complete independence, for the only connection will be the fact that the Emperor of Austria will be the King of Hungary, the latter country paying 30 per cent. of the cost of the army and court expenses.

How deep rooted is racial animosity in Austria-Hungary may be inferred from the fact that the German element, sooner than submit to the domination of any other race, would rather unite their destiny with Germany. In their meetings, called to protest against the order of Badeni, resolutions to this effect were passed.

Sharks Carried a Message Five Years.

While strolling along the shore of the Delaware Bay, near Fishing Creek, N. J., five years ago, Miss Beulah Bate and three young women companions wrote their names and addresses on four slips of paper, sealed them in as many bottles, and cast them far out into the bay. For days and weeks they watched and waited for tidings of the bottles, but none came, and they had almost forgotten the incident.

A day or two ago Miss Bate received a long letter from the captain of an English man-of-war, stating that while coasting along the coast of England one of the seamen fell overboard and narrowly escaped being devoured by a huge shark. After hauling the man aboard, the sailors secured the shark and found in its stomach the bottle containing Miss Bate's message. Miss Bate is now a student at the State Normal school in Trenton, and has become quite a heroine among the more romantic of her classmates.—Philadelphia Record.

Supplies Carried to Workmen by Electrically Propelled Boats.

Electric power has become quite as important a factor in building operations as the stationary steam engine. It owes its popularity to the versatility of its applications and the convenience of conveying power short distances, particularly in inaccessible places. An instance of this is found in the building of a sewer at Worcester, Mass., where electrically driven scows deliver the materials to the workmen, electric lights supply the necessary illumination, electric ventilating fans make work possible and electric pumps aid largely in rapid construction. That city has a large sewer eighteen feet wide and thirteen feet high, in which both storm water and sewage are carried away, but as it is desirable to separate the two a smaller sewer six feet wide is being built inside the larger one, utilizing the bottom and one side of it for the walls. A cofferdam is constructed to enable the other wall to be built, and in order to deliver the materials to the workmen electric scows were rigged up, which work to perfection. About midway between the ends of the new sewer a small wharf has been constructed, and the materials are delivered to it by an incline through a hole made in the top of one wall. The incline and sewers are lighted by incandescent lamps, all the power being supplied by a near-by electric lighting station. A double trolley system is used, the wires being hung from insulated brackets in the arch in such a way that a trolley can be run on each, two wires being necessary, one for the return circuit.

NAVIGATION IN A SEWER.

The improvised towboat is a catamaran twenty-seven feet long and five feet wide, each of the small hulls being eighteen inches wide. In the middle of the deck is a small paddle-wheel, boxed into prevent splashing, and driven through the intermediary of sprocket-wheels and a chain by an electric motor. At the stern are a rudder and a controller of ordinary form, so that one man can manipulate both. There are six of these boats, and they have readily handled 12,000 bricks, fifty barrels of cement and 100 barrels of sand daily.

Cork Works Automatically.

A cork which is always in its place in the neck of the bottle, except when the bottle is in the very act of being decanted, is shown herewith. It is a French invention, and is designed to keep the bottle always covered and its contents always protected from the air. The cork, it will be see, is balanced and when the bottle is standing upright it drops into its place in the neck, but when the bottle is tilted the cork is lifted away to permit of the free flow of the contents.

BALANCED CORK.

Imitation Coin in China.

A kind of Chinese money which is largely manufactured and sold is worthy of mention, although the traveler need not trouble himself with it except as a curiosity. This is prepared for the special purpose of burning at the graves of deceased relatives, as an offering to the dead. The denizens of the other world are supposed to require and to be capable of receiving money in this way; but the Chinaman is far too practical a person to part in such a fashion with the currency of the empire. Instead he buys for a few "cash" a large supply of silvered and gilded pieces of paper, or of imitation coins blocked out of cardboard.

Although these have no purchasing power on earth, they are supposed to count for much in the transactions of the spirit world. By this practice, one is reminded of an old story of a miser who left his belongings to his son on condition that a certain sum of money should be buried in the coffin with him. The son was, however, a chip of the old block and carried out his father's wishes by placing in the coffin a crossed check for the required amount, assured that it had little chance of being presented at his banker's.—Chambers' Journal.

To recklessly experiment upon himself with hope of relief is the dyspeptic. Yet the nostrums for this malady are as the sands of the sea, and, presumably, about as efficacious. Indigestion, that obstinate malady, even if of long perpetuity, is eventually overcome with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, an appetizing tonic and alterative, which cures constipation, fever and ague, bilious remittent, rheumatism, kidney complaint and feebleness.

A Modern Youth.

"Ha, ha, my proud beauty," said he, "you love another."

"I do," said the blushing maiden.

He pondered. "Well," said he finally, his features lighting with fiendish joy, "you ain't in it if you do. Within twenty-four hours I shall have procured an injunction against your marrying him."—Indianapolis Journal.

Sure Rule for Adverbs.

One time a county superintendent of schools was questioning the pupils of a country school. He wrote on the black board the sentence, "The fly has wings," and asked a class what part of speech each word was. They passed the "the" without serious trouble.

"Adverb," shouted the class in unison.

SAGINAW'S TURN.

Bert. Ellis, the Best Known Traveling Man in the Valley, Talks on a SUBJECT OF PUBLIC INTEREST.

SAGINAW MICH.—Mr. A. G. Ellis, of this city, is probably the best known traveling man in Michigan. Nearly every one in Saginaw Valley knows "Bert" Ellis. For twenty years he has carried his samples and good nature to his many merchant friends, who are always glad to see him. But Mr. Ellis had trouble the same as other people. Twenty years of traveling, hardly two meals in the same place, or twice in the same bed, called at all hours of the night to make the next town, smoking probably to excess, are conditions which injured Mr. Ellis's health. He became nervous, his sleep broken, and restless; his stomach troublesome; his heart's action irregular, and his entire system debilitated. In speaking recently with your correspondent, Mr. Ellis said: "As the troubles I mentioned became more aggravating I decided to use Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer. The improvement in my condition was remarkable. I was able to secure restful sleep, my nervousness was overcome, stomach trouble corrected; heart's action became regular; in fact I became as well as ever, even in the face of the fact that I still smoke and continued to travel."

Mr. Ellis's experience is similar to thousands of traveling men and others who smoke to excess and are irregular and indiscreet in diet and sleep. There can only be one result—debilitated nerves. It is equally true that there is only one successful method of correcting such conditions.—Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer.

NOTICE OF STOCKHOLDER'S MEETING

Office of the First National Bank,
Auburn, Ind. Dec. 8, 1896

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Stockholders of the First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana, will be held on THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1898.

At the banking house of said bank in Auburn, Indiana, between hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, for the purpose of electing seven (7) directors to serve for the ensuing year, and to transact such other business as may regularly come before such meeting.

CHARLES MCCLELLAN,
Cashier.

Something to Know.

It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centers in the stomach, gently stimulates the Liver and Kidneys and aids these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very best blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it. Sold for 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

THE USUAL RESULT.

The St. Joe News has the following bit of information.

M. E. Chapman who traded his farm near Coletown last spring for a hardware store at Antwerp has had to place his business in the hands of a receiver for the benefit of his creditors and is a ruined man financially, so we understand Mr. Chapman's friends feared such an ending when he took charge of the store but he considered it the best thing he could do at that time and so made the venture.

We regret greatly to hear of Mr. Chapman's ill fortune. At one time he was considered a well to do and prosperous farmer. It is a wonder that so intelligent a man should have made such a move. It is almost sure to result in failure.

New Blacksmith

I have taken charge of H. C. Shull's Carriage repair and Blacksmith Shop, J. W. Shaffer's old stand, where I would be pleased to see all who need anything in my line. Horse-shoeing a specialty having had a large experience in that line.

QUEER CONDITIONS

A strange state of things has been discovered in the Illinois legislature which is now holding a special session for the purpose of making a new apportionment of the state for state senators. The republicans have a fair majority but are not united. So they need the presence of every one of their men. But now, they find that five of them had resigned to accept a federal appointment of some kind at the hands of prsident McKinley. One is now minister to China, and just starting off; another has an office in the departments at Washington, a third is made a judge; the fourth has become a postmaster, and the fifth has accepted and is serving as member of the commission that is working up a new government for Indian Territory. All of them want to hold their jobs, and all of them had resigned their places as members of the legislature and supposed the governor had accepted them and that they were out. But it now appears that the governor, foreseeing that he might need these members, merely put their resignations aside and let things wait. He never accepted them. Now, if these men come into the legislature and act, they lose Uncle Sam's job, and as their resignations have not been accepted, they do not know whether they can go on and hold their new places till they are accepted. And again, if they do not come into the legislature and help the governor out of the hole, he and his friends may go back on them and try to get them put out of their federal positions. It is a queer condition of things. As the legislature, like that in Indiana, has but one regular session, when that is over, the members feel safe to take something else for the rest of the two years.

General Debility and Loss of Flesh

Scott's Emulsion has been the standard remedy for nearly a quarter of a century. Physicians readily admit that they obtain results from it that they cannot get from any other flesh-forming food.

There are many other preparations on the market that pretend to do what does, but they fail to perform it. The pure Norwegian Cod-liver Oil made into a delightful cream, skillfully blended with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, which are such valuable tonics, makes this preparation an ideal one and checks the wasting tendency, and the patient almost immediately commences to put on flesh and gain a strength which surprises them.

Be sure you get SCOTT'S Emulsion. See that the man and fish are on the wrapper.

50c. and $1.00, all druggists.

COMMISSIONERS.

Thursday's Daily.

The regular session ended last evening, Wednesday of the second week, being always the last day. But it is nearly always necessary for the Board to continue work several days longer as a special session. So they are at work today.

THE DANNELS DITCH.

The ditch petitioned for by W. A. Dannels was gone over again yesterday as there had been a remonstrance against it. So after hearing both sides and their attorneys, the Board appointed reviewers. They are Oscar Taylor John Yarde and James W. Platter, all good men and they are to meet at the auditor's office January 3, and from there go to the ditch and review it, and then report at the next regular term of the Board which is in March.

HIGHWAYS.

The Catherine Richards road in Concord Township came up frr hearing. W. H. Madden, Henry Aldrich and Samuel Lowe are the viewers and they meet Dec. 20 in the office of A. J. Baxter at Butler.

In the matter of the Daniel Zook road in Butler township, Charles Bangs Solomon Harding and Frank Britton, are viewers. They meet in the auditor's office Jan. 3.

THAT CRAZY MAN.

Our readers will remember the crazy man who wanted to buy arsenic at the drugstores. He has been rather a tough guest at the jail, and they can not let him have anything in his room as he smashes chairs or anything he can get hold of. It is believed by some that he is Chris. Merry, the Chicago wife murderer, and to test this, it was proposed to secure a picture of him and send it to the Chicago police. So Deputy Sheriff Platter asked Walter Hartman to come over with his kodak and see if a picture could be taken. The two men called on the prisonier and found him pretty violent, swearing like a pirate and playing bad in general. They finally thought they might get him interested in a "new machine" they had, that is the kodak. He had stepped to the water faucet, and filled his tin cup, the only article in the room. Then when they asked him to examine the new machine which was then being held up at the hole in the grating ready to get a snap on him, he suddenly turned and fired the tin cup, water and all, straight at the hole. The kodak was jerked aside in time to save it, but the water took effect on their clothing. The two men gave up the job and his picture will not adorn the rogues' gallery in the Chicago police headquarters. But they call him "Chris" all the time and he don't seem to object.

BLADDER TROUBLES

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, a receptancle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfect action of the kidneys. The second way is from careless local treatment of other diseases.

SAMPLE SENT FREE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder troubles. It is comforting to know that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root fulfills every wish in quickly curing bladder and urinary troubles It corrects frequent calls, inability to hold urine and scalding or stinging pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention Auburn COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

GIVE US A REST

Let us all hope that these expensive law suits will soon be over. We refer to those growing out of the late county troubles. We have said on several occasions, the county is suffering through this litigration and that no one is likely to be punished. The case against Ex-Surveyor Hook, has just ended in a prompt acquittal. It was given to the jury at the close of a trial lasting several days, and in which full time and opportunity was given to bring proof against him, and able legal talent, was given to assist the regular prosecutor. Yet so little was there in the case, that the jury were only twenty minutes when they came out with a verdict of "not guilty." It would seem that the insufficiency of evidence against a man ought to have been seen at the start, and if so no suit should have been brought. We by no means wish to be understood as desiring to shield a guilty man. But to bring cases against a party, when there is such a manifest uncertainty is going to an extreme which is likely to cost the taxpayers a pile of money and for which they will get no return. The only man so far, that was in danger of conviction is Perry Fair, and it is at present a matter of doubt as to him. There seems to be more reason for calling him into court than the others, but even in his case, there may be nothing that can be proved. It was perhaps, in his case, well, that the matter was investigated. It was proper in the case of his father. But to an outsider, the trials of the two commissioners of Mr. McIntosh and Mr. Hook look like expensive investigations without sufficient cause. They will cost the county many thousands, and the accused persons, a good deal, and we feel that in justice to all, these suits should now be stopped. At least no new ones should begun. As we have often said, we feel certain that the men who committed the crimes, all confessed at the first and are being punished now.

IS IT GOLD?

Well, that is very doubtful. We allude to the reputed finds of small quantities of gold near Warsaw and Huntington. One party is reported to have picked up small chunks of it near Warsaw, and another man brought in several gallons of dirt from a creek a few miles from Huntington which the usual "old miner" washed out, getting some gold dust. Our people should not get excited over the finding of any metals in Northern Indiana. There is little or no chance to get anything valuable. True a little bog iron was at one time found in the boggy ground not far from Rochester in Fulton county and then a few miles this side of Ligonier, where bog iron was dug and smelted for a few years. But this iron was a formation not depending on bed rock. With gold, it is different. Gold found in dirt has been washed off of some nearby rock, and of a kind of rock not found near the surface in Northern Indiana. If any small pieces of gold have been found, it is likely it has been "drifted" in here from some distant region, in early geologic days. Pieces of copper and of lead, have been found in several parts of North Indiana, that evidently came from the Lake Superior or some distant part. Laporte county and Steuben have furnished fine specimens of copper. But no one claims there is a mine of it. One of three things is likely true in regard this gold:

1. It may be a few detached particles that drifted here from some distant place during the glacial period.

2. It may be that the particles found are not gold, but a form of iron pyrites. In this form it is known as sulphuret of iron and may be in small bright, metallic cubes, or in round lumps with the threads of metal radiating from the center. Both these forms are often found in the beds of small streams, or in wet strata of dirt and gravel in digging pits, wells or cellars. These men may have found some of this very stuff which has little or no value.

3. These reports may all come from the too common, telegraph liar.

A Life Saved.

Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

Sold by F. E. Davenport, Auburn.

BLEW UP.

The electric light engine at Ligonier blew up Tuesday evening when they were getting ready to start the lights. One entire side of the building was demolished and the engine ruined. It was fortunate that no one happened to to be in the building at the time. The report was deafening and the concussion shook the buildings and created a great deal of excitement until the cause was ascertained. Steps will be immediately taken to repair the damage. Ligonier is a thriving and prosperous town, and will not be without lights.

THESE WILL SERVE.

GRAND JURY.

The grand and petit jurors for the coming term of court are:—

SAD INDEED.

At about ten o'clock this forenoon Curt Eckert met with a painful accident while at work at the Kiblinger factory. He was engaged in running a buzz planer and and accidently shoved his hand into the saw. The end of the three first fingers was cut off. He was carried to the office of Drs. Matheny & Stamets and Dr. Baxter was called to administer chloroform while Dr. Stamets and Dr. Matheny dressed the wounds which took a long time. It was after dinner when the COURIER reporter called at the office and the three were still at work. The accident is an unfortunate one and comes to an industrious young man. He is paying for property and never missed a day, because he needed the money to pay for the little home.

Newspaper Advertising in the United States

A book of two hundred pages, containing a catalogue of about six thousand newspapers, being all that are credited by the American Newspaper Directory (December edition for 1897) with having regular issues of 1,000 copies or more. Also separate State maps of each and every State of the American Union, naming those towns only in which there are issued newspapers having more than 1,000 circulation. This book (issued December 15, 1897) will be sent, postage paid, to any address, on receipt of one dollar. Address The Geo. P. Rowell Advertising Co., 10 Spruce St., New York.

TO FIGHT LEIGHTY

J. D. Leighty, who was so previous in pushing Spencer out of the pension office at Indianapolis, may have rough sledding yet. There will be an effort made to prevent his confirmation by the senate. Spencer's four years were not out till next March, but Leighty got so hungry for an office that he had him forced out on some such charge as "partisanship," and got the place himself several months ago. The COURIER has repeatedly gone on record as opposed to this way of crowding an outgoing officer. He should be allowed to serve out his full four years, no matter what ticket he votes. Mr. Leighty has lost much in the estimation of his former constituents by his unseemly haste in this matter. He had only ceased drawing pay as a congressman since last March, and surely he could have waited till next March.

TWO ISLANDS.

Uncle Sam Has a Chance to Buy Two Good Ones.

The United States has for several years had a chance to buy two West India Islands, St Thomas and St Croix, now and for a long time, owned by Denmark. They are so far away, that Denmark has not found them profitable, but they are so near to us, and so handy on the road by water to South America, that they would be very desirable as stopping places and coaling stations. Great Britain and Germany both are willing to buy the islands, but no European power should be allowed to get new teritory in the new world. It would be much wiser for Uncle Sam to get these islands so near us than to get the Hawaiian Islands, so far away. Let us try our hand on these Danish Islands first, and see about Cuba next then Hawaii later if we succeed with our first ventures. Uncle Sam has always been noted for his good business sense. Here is a line of most important business, in which he can put his business ability to a most excellent use.

IS SUMMER THERE.

The Farmers are Cutting Wheat In Argentina.

The people in the countries on the equator are now having warm weather and south of that they are having the regular summer that we enjoy in July. For example, in Argentine they are now cutting their wheat. They are about thirty degrees south of the equator, or about the same distance south of it as our Gulf States are north of it. Their harvest is not yet done, and it will be some weeks before the grain is for the market, and they can begin to ship. It is estimated they will have a surplus of 30 to 35 millions of bushels of wheat to sell. This is a vast omount and when it comes into market may somewhat effect the price. But we presume by that time, the most of our old wheat will have been sold, at least it will be out of the hands of the farmers.

But it is queer to think of it. With them the sun is always to the north. We who have never seen such a thing have grown to thing of it only as in the south we look for the heat of the weather. We made the acquaintance, a few years ago of an Englishman who had been some years in Australia. He said it was a hard thing to get accustomed to, to have the sun always at the north. It sometimes bothered them, by getting them 'turned around' as to direction, thinking that when looking towards the sun, they were looking south. But of course the people who always have lived south of the equator, would be bothered if they came here, for the same reasons.

REVIVAL

The revival services which are to begin at the Lutheran church next Sabbath will be preceded three nights of prayer service, commencing on Thursday evening. On Friday evening there will be a watch-meeting. The services for the evening are as follow: From 8 to 9 o'clock preparatory services; from 9 to 10 services conducted by three ladies of the church; from 10 to 11 services will be in charge of three young ladies; from 11 to 12 services will be led by three young men. This service promises to be one of special interest. The pastor invites all who can come. On Sabbath morning there will be communion services to which each member of the church is urged to be present.

A Peerless Liniment.

As a pain destroyer and cure for rheumatism, Salvation Oil is the peer of all liniments. Mr. Wm. H. Brown, proprietor of Striebinger House, Cleveland, O., writes: "I suffered from rheumatism for twelve years and my last attack kept me in bed, unable to walk. I used Salvation Oil and soon was up and about. As a pain destroyer this liniment has no equal." Salvation Oil is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Try it and be convinced. Sold by F. E. Davenport, Auburn.

ORANGES HURT.

So Says a Dispatch From the Pacific Coast.

A dispatch dated Wednesday, Dec. 22, from the Pacific Coast brings word that frosts are doing harm in southern California. And as the weather has steadily grown worse here since the dispatch was sent it is evident that the great fruit crop of southern California is in serious danger. The dispatch read:

Heavy frosts have been felt, in the last two nights, in many counties of the state, and it is feared that the orange and lemon crops have been seriously injured.

One report says that the damage will be over $1,000,000 Fully 100,000 carloads of oranges, valued at $6,000,000, are on the trees. Another severe frost is predicted for tonight.

INDIANA GOLD

A few days ago, we said in the DAILY COURIER that we did not believe there is gold in the north part of Indiana. We are still of that opinion, for the reasons then given. But in the south end of the state, conditions are different. Small quantities of genuine gold have been found there since the earliest settlements. Brown county has furnished the most, and they are still finding it there. Quite a number of persons work at the business of placer gold washing and some have made money at it. But it is found in such small quantities, that no great fortunes have been made. It is generally found in the loose stones, gravel and sand that is washed into creeks from some rocky hillside. Reports come from there that considerable attention is being given to it this winter.

A CLEVER TRICK

It certainly looks like it, but there is really no trick about it. Anybody can try it who has Lame Back and Weak Kidneys, Malaria or nervous troubles. We mean he can cure himself right away by taking Electric Bitters. This medicine tones up the whole system, acts as a stimulant to the Liver and Kidneys, is a blood purifier and nerve tonic It cures Constipation, Headache Fainting Spells, Sleeplessness and Melancholy. it is purely vegetable, a mild laxative and, restores the system to its natural vigor. Try Electric Bitters and be convinced that they are a miracle worker. Every bottle guaranteed. Only 50c a bottle at H. M. McCoad's drugstore.

HIS 65TH.

James E. Rose celebrated his 65th birthday on last Wednesday evening, by an invitation to the Auburn Bar, to a 6 o'clock dinner at his home, No. 82 South Main street. A very enjoyable evening was spent.

Those in attendance were: Judge Roby and wife, E. D. Hartman and daughter, Mrs. Hodge; D. A. Garwood and wife, C. M. Brown and wife, J. H. Rose and wife, C. E. Emanuel and wife, F. L. Welsheimer and wife, J. E. Pomeroy and wife, Frank E. Rose and wife, Thomas H. Sprott and wife, W. C. Hartman and wife, D. M. Link and Miss Blanche Shilling, J. P. Crimmens and Miss Edna Davis, Price D. West, and Mrs. Anna Moss.

Mr. Rose is one of the earliest of DeKalb's pioneers, and one of its first attorneys, and has always occupied a prominent place in business and social circles and at the bar, and this gathering on his birthday anniversary was made all the more pleasant by these agreeable memories and associations. Mr. Rose is still in the vigor of active health, and the wish of his guests that he may enjoy many more anniversaries like this, is likely to be realized. And in these good wishes the DAILY joins heartily.

AN OLD VIOLIN.

George Rincholt of Jackson township is in possession of an old violin which he prizes highly. More than 25 years ago he was the owner of a good instrument, but sold it. Last week while in Auburn he purchased an old violin of a Mr. Cramar for 50 cents. He took it home and in making repairs it was necessary to take it apart and to his surprise found that he had bought back his old violin as his name was out on the inside.

CLEVELAND MISSING

He Has Not Been Heard of Since Monday.

William C. Cleveland a rich and widely known farmer of Hickeville, O., has been missing since Monday and it is supposed he has been murdered. He had on his person a considerable sum of money. It is alleged that his family and financial affairs were in a good condition and the family know of no reason for his strange disappearance. He was about 60 years old and when he left home wore a brown blouse.

BAD BANK FAILURE.

The Chestnut-st National Bank in Philadelphia failed yesterday. It is one of the heaviest institutions of that city, but was injured by the depreciation of stocks, etc, it held. Its resources are put at nearly 4 millions, but it could not stand up under such adverse conditions as faced it. It may be re-organized and pay out, and may eventually go on. Even banks find the diminishing values under a gold standard will work against them. Last year, they were afraid the adoption of free silver would make "cheap money" and ruin business, They should remember that bankers and all sorts of money in their business. Whew money was "cheap" soon after the war, than the same classes have ever made since. No one is making as much money now as they made then, if we except the trusts and other corporations that are "protected" and profited by a high tariff duty. The people a large are going backward.

PAUPER AMERICAN LABOR.

Funny things happen. Now the carpenters and joiners of Scotland are protesting against the importation into that country of joiner wood work for buildings imported from America. They claim Americans are not paid as much for such labor as they get in Scotland. And our "protected interests" have been asking to be protected from the cheaper labor in the old country. The COURIER has for years, repeatedly shown that we are able over here to compete with anybody in any line of work that we can do at all. We need no protection. We need free raw materials of the kinds we are obliged to buy abroad and then we can furnish the ingenuity, the machinery and labor that will compete with the best of them.

TO TREAT CHRONIC DISEASES The Doctor comes to us indorsed by thousands of grateful patients whom he has cured ann relieved of suffering. He is a graduate of the best medical institutions and hospitals in the country, and has visited all the leading hospitals of Europe and his life work has been devoted to learning how to cure diseases and relieve suffering humanity.

The Doctor Treats Only Chronic Diseases

He thoroughly understands those symptoms, causes and the nature of those many lingering and wasting diseases which cause premature and untimely deaths, or make life a burden for years. He cures hundreds of those cases that have been pronounced incurable over and over. He can tell you at a glance whether your case is curable or not—he only takes those cases that are curable.

Are You Afflicted?

If you are, the Doctor invites you to call at the hotel and see him—learn why you are sick, what ails you and how you may be cured if indeed your case is curable.

Can You Afford To Be Sick?

Life is short, though we live to a ripe old age; if in good health, we enjoy life; if sick and suffering, the oft times life is not worth the living, then why not make One More Effort to Get Well? No matter how many physicians have treated you or how long you have been sick, or again, how often you have been told that your case is incurable, you, like thousands of others, may be cured. The Doctor cures diseases of the Nervous System, Lungs, Stomach, Kidneys, Bladder, Throat, Heart Blood and Skin Diseases, all those diseases peculiar to woman, and all private diseases, lost manhood, etc.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

TWO TRAINS CRASH.

Fatal Collision on a Tennessee Road—Train Hands Killed.

The vestibule passenger train on the Norfolk and Western came in collision with a freight at Clark's Summit, Tenn. The engines of both trains were badly wrecked, as were a number of freight cars and baggage and postal cars. R. H. Ashmere, express messenger, was badly injured and he will die. Postal Clerk Huffman was instantly killed, and thrown under the second-class coach. Fireman Collis had both legs cut off, and was otherwise horribly cut and bruised, dying soon after. Engineer McCarty was severely cut, a number of contusions and internally injured. He will die. The wreck was occasioned by the engineer of the freight train mistaking his orders. None of the passengers were hurt, all escaping with a severe shock.

SCORES WERE INJURED

By a Gas Explosion During a Chicago Fire.

Fire broke out in the basement of the five-story building at 104 Madison street, Chicago.

The blaze was insignificant at first, but crowds of people gathered in front of the building to watch the work of the firemen. A dozen policemen were busily engaged in pushing back the throng when a terrible explosion of natural gas took place. The building was badly wrecked, windows, window gratings, sidewalks, lights and manhole covers were hurled into the air and fell among the crowd. Dozens of people were thrown from their feet, and twenty-three were injured.

The explosion caused a wild panic in the street, and in the frantic rush for safety which followed many people were thrown down and trampled upon.

Postmaster Held Up.

As Postmaster Rhiner of Chandler, Ok., was making up the mail for the Guthrie stage two masked men entered the office and asked for mail. He turned to look and was covered with a revolver and was compelled to open the safe. The men took $600 in cash and $100 in stamps, put them in a sack, left the office and, mounting horses a short distance away, rode off toward the Indian Territory line. A posse at once started in pursuit, but have sent back no report.

Blanco's Latest Move.

New York special: At the Cuban Junta official confirmation was given to a story that Gen. Blanco has sent to this city from Cuba a man whose mission is to join one of the filibustering expeditions to the east coast of Cuba and secure the assassination of Gen. Gomez. "Yes, we know about Blanco's emissary," a representative of the Junta said. "We know the steamship he is on, and we know his name. He is not likely to join any of our expeditions."

Fortune for a Hamiltonian.

John Hoeft, aged 84 years, who for a number of years has been making his home with his son-in-law, William Seickman, on South Water street, Hamilton, Ohio, has received word from his attorney at Dayton that a fortune of not less than $300,000 has been left to him by his brother, who died some time ago in New York. The property consists of buildings and lots in New York City and land in Missouri and California.

Lady Millais Dead.

London special: Lady Millais, widow of Sir John Millais, the late President of the Royal Academy, is dead. Lady Millais was the divorced wife of John Ruskin, who voluntarily gave her up when it was evident that she loved Millais. Ruskin stood by in the church while, in 1855, she was married to Millais.

Prairie Fire in Texas.

Prairie fires are raging in the great panhandle country, in Hall County, Texas, and the ranchmen's efforts to control it have been futile. It is reported that 200 acres of grazing land has been burned over and the loss of stock will amount to thousands of dollars.

Steamer on the Rocks.

London special: The British steamer Orona, from New York for Leith, remains fast on Inchkeith Island in the Firth of Forth, and is seriously damaged. About five hundred tons of her cargo have been discharged.

Nine Men Drowned.

London special: A boat containing nine stevedores, while proceeding to a steamship in the Thames, was capsized and all the men were drowned.

A Terrible Explosion in a Gas Plant

A succession of explosions at the United States Acetylene Liquifying Company, in Jersey City, caused the loss of two lives and $20,000 damage to the works. It is said that the first explosion was due to the boilers bursting, and as the fire spread to the various acid tanks there was a succession of deafening reports.

Horrible Death.

At Babylon, N. Y., the clothing of Miss Mary Daily, aged 84, caught fire while she was sitting near a grate. Before aid reached her she was fatally burned.

To Invite the President.

Secretary McKnight of the trans-Mississippi congress has received word that the Chambers of Commerce at Portland, Oregon, and Tacoma, Wash., have appointed committees to urge President McKinley's attendance at the congress next fall, which will be held at Wichita, Kan.

Train Hits a Stage Coach.

Twenty persons were injured, three perhaps fatally, at a grade crossing on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad between Passaic and Delaware, N. J. They were in a stage which was struck by a train. That only of them escaped is thought marvelous.

CEDE KASSALA TO BRITAIN.

Parsons Pasha Reaches the Egyptian City to Formally Accept the Transfer.

Parsons Pasha and other officers have arrived at Kassala to arrange to take over the palace from the Italians. In 1891, when Great Britain and Italy settled their boundaries in east Africa, the latter power was permitted to occupy Kassala until such time as the Egyptians should be in a position to resume possession of the town. In 1894 Gen. Baratieri availed himself of this permission and captured it by a brilliant attack. On May 8, 1896, the Italian Government, answering a question in the Chamber of Deputies, announced that Kassala would be retained, as it was to Italy's interest to fulfill claims to Great Britain's friendship, which, it is understood, called for the holding of Kassala by Italian troops, but even then it was believed Italy would hold the place only temporarily. Since that time events have caused the practical abandonment of Italy's colonization schemes in Africa, and Kassala, therefore, is to be occupied by the British.

BIG JEWELRY STORE BURNED.

Mermod & Jaccard Company of St. Louis Suffers a Loss of $335,000.

A fire started in the basement of the building occupied by the Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Company, at St. Louis, and in an almost incredibly short time the five-story building was completely gutted. The total loss will reach $335,000; fully covered by insurance. The fire had been burning some time before it was discovered. It was one of the fiercest and quickest fires in the annals of that city. It is thought the fire started in the boiler room, communicating to the packing room and, shooting up the elevator shaft, quickly spread over the building. W. A. Rutledge, the engineer, and his family lived on the fourth floor. They barely escaped with their lives. The firemen dragged them unconscious from their beds and carried them down the fire escape. Five minutes later the floors fell. Several other tenants in the building had narrow escapes, but there were no fatalities.

FREIGHT TRAIN RUNS WILD.

Goes Down a Mountain at a Mile a Minute and Smashes Fifty Cars.

A freight train of thirty-one loaded cars, going down the mountain to Altoona, Pa., became unmanageable in consequence of the slippery condition of the tracks, and made the twelve miles from Galitz to Altoona in as many minutes, and crashed into a freight train in the yards, directly in front of the passenger station. About fifty cars were completely broken up, and the Hollidaysburg passenger train, which was standing on the track outside the passenger shed, was thrown over on its side. The engineer and fireman of the runaway train were helped from the cab of the wrecked locomotive, and both were able to walk away. Three other trainmen were taken to the hospital. One of them is said to be fatally injured. A brakeman named Corbin is unaccounted for.

Want Tribal Courts Restored.

Trouble in Indian territory is expected by the commissioner of Indian affairs and by others in Washington who are familiar with the condition of affairs prevailing there. On Jan. 1 the tribal courts will be abolished by an act passed at the last session of Congress and the United States Courts given full jurisdiction over the territory. In many quarters the officers of the Indian courts have declared that they will forcibly resist all efforts to prevent them doing business, while the United States marshals have given notice that any tribal courts attempting to sit will be broken up and those assuming to conduct them will be arrested. A delegation of eight Cherokees, seven of them full-bloods, is now in Washington. A few days ago they presented a memorial to Congress asking that the law be rescinded, but Congress has now adjourned without action, and when it again convenes the Indian courts will be out of existence. Meanwhile the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs appointed to consider the problems presented in Indian territory has practically decided to recommend amendments to the present law providing for the apportionment of all lands held by the five civilized tribes among the members of these tribes, and also an amendment providing that all valid leases shall be recognized by the Government of the United States and the money paid on account of them covered into the treasury of the United States for the benefit of the various tribes as such. The Dawes commission has reported its failure to come to any conclusion with the Indians.

Need the Nicaraguan Canal.

A matter which is troubling the people at Washington who are interested in the general commercial prosperity of the United States is the large falling off in our trade with South America. Both imports and exports have greatly decreased. Imports fell from $108,828,462 in 1896 to $107,389,009 in 1897. Exports dropped from $36,297,671 to $33,769,493. Mr. Smith of the bureau of American republics is not able to entirely explain the reason for this, but he finds the prospective remedy in the shorter and cheaper transportation which would be furnished by the completion of the Nicaraguan canal. Great savings in distance would be made from ports on the western coast—Guayaquil in Ecuador, Callao in Peru, and Valparaiso in Chili. The distance that would be saved from New York to these points by an isthmus canal compared with the Cape Horn route would be the following: Guayaquil, 7,073 miles; Callao, 5,896 miles; Valparaiso, 3,426 miles. These are the distances to be saved by steamers. The saving to sailing vessels would be much greater, as they follow a longer course in rounding the horn.

Cannot Convict Mrs. Nack.

While District Attorney Youngs of County, New York, is non-committal upon the matter, it is understood that he has finally decided to allow Mrs. Nack to plead guilty to manslaughter in the first degree. It is asserted that the prosecuting officers have carefully gone over the evidence against the woman and have reached the conclusion that it would be impossible to convict her either of murder in the first or second degree.

To Stop Exportation of Logs.

In the Ontario legislature at Toronto, J. M. Gibson, commissioner of crown lands, brought down a bill providing that when the licenses to cut pine logs expired on April 30 a clause be inserted in all licenses or permits thereafter granted to cut logs in Ontario, providing that the holders of such licenses should have all the pine logs they cut sawed in Canada, and that no pine logs should be exported from the province.

Kansas City Auditorium Burned.

Fire destroyed the big Auditorium building, Ninth and Holmes streets, which contains the biggest theater in Kansas City and one of the big hotels. The Auditorium building cost about $225,000, and is owned by Alexander Fraser, who also owns the hotel and theater furnishings.

Vaults' Contents Unharmed.

The vaults of the Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Company at St. Louis, whose establishment burned recently, were opened, and the contents, consisting of jewels, watches and diamonds, valued at more than $250,000, were found intact.

Situation in the East.

A Peking dispatch says: The Chinese Government has granted Russia permission to winter a squadron at Port Arthur. Great Britain demands a quid pro quo if concessions have been made to other powers. It has been suggested that the Japanese and British occupy Wei-Hai-Wei jointly. The situation at Kiao-Chou bay is unchanged. Germany remains unyielding and the Chinese councils are divided as to whether it should be peace or war with Germany. China regards Russia as her only friend and is asking her advice alone. British influence is nil, having suffered greatly through the failure of the loan negotiations. China is now negotiating a loan with Russia. The latter demands the dismissal of the British railroad engineers in north China, and it is probable that it will be granted. The German drill instructors will be dismissed at the expiration of their contracts and will be replaced by Russians. Russian officers have already been appointed to drill the armies of north China.

CHICAGO FACTORY FIRE.

Furniture Factory Burns, with $250,000 Loss.

Fire broke out in the A. H. Andrews furniture factory at Twenty-second and Fisk streets, Chicago. Before it could be brought under control property approximating in value $250,000 was destroyed, and three firemen narrowly escaped death. The three-story factory and contents were a total loss, but the neighboring buildings were merely scorched. At the office of the A. H. Andrews company it was stated that the total loss on building and contents would reach $250,000. The firm employed 275 people.

LOVE COULD NOT DO MORE.

In Spite of Daughters' Efforts, Mrs. Schlintz Burned to Death.

Mrs. Freda Schlintz, aged and crippled, was overcome by smoke and died when within a few feet of safety during a fire which broke out in the house in which she lived on East Ninety-fifth street, New York, before daylight the other day. Every effort was made to save her life by her two daughters, but their strength gave out, and they were forced to abandon their mother, and barely escaped death themselves.

Montgomery's Slayer Held.

The sensational killing of R. C. Montgomery by John F. Joyce in Maryville is now almost the only topic of conversation in northwest Missouri. As throwing light on the jealousy which caused the shooting, it is reported that Montgomery and Mrs. Joyce went together to Omaha, and she is now in Coin, Iowa, as a telegram received from her indicates. Joyce alleges that Montgomery had wronged him during a long period. The defense will enter a plea of insanity. The coroner's jury returned a verdict which names Joyce as Montgomery's slayer. The ball with which Montgomery was killed was found lodged in his aorta.

Schools, but No Pupils.

The Attorney General and State School Superintendent of Kansas have decided that 200 school houses in the depopulated districts in western Kansas may be sold at public auction. These buildings have stood for years unoccupied, the homes of bats and owls. In some cases enough taxes have been collected from non-resident land owners to keep a six months' term of school running, in many instances for the benefit of a single family.

Birth of Quadruplets.

Mrs. Mahala Mullins, a noted moonshiner woman of Hancock County, Tenn., has become the mother of four boys and all are alive. The husband of Mahala is an invalid, weighing less than 100 pounds, while she weighed 600 two months ago.

Wellman Buys a Sealer.

Walter Wellman, an American newspaper man, has bought at Tromsoe, Norway, the sealer Laura, a vessel of 153 tons, for an expedition which he will lead to Franz Josef land in June next. Nine men, chiefly Norwegians, will accompany him.

Suicide of a Washington Belle.

Miss Leila Herbert, daughter of ex-Secretary of the Navy Herbert of Alabama, died at her home in Washington, D. C., as the result of leaping from the third story of her home. A long illness had unsettled her reason.

A New Hoosier Road.

The Elkhart, Goshen and Southern Railway was incorporated at Indianapolis; capital stock, $250,000. The company will build an electric railway connecting the cities of Goshen and Elkhart and Lake Wauwausee.

Says No to Rockefeller.

Because a majority of the residents of Sleepy Hollow believe they would be granting John D. Rockefeller too many privileges, they have refused his offer to spend $200,000 on the village roads.

It's Quincy by a Big Vote.

In Boston, Mayor Josiah Quincy was re-elected for two years in the municipal election by a plurality of about 4,500. It was the closest city election ever held there.

A Victim of Masked Burglars.

David S. R. Lambert, who was wounded by masked burglars at his home in Wilton, Conn., is dead.

Civil Service Law Upheld.

The Illinois Supreme Court has declared the civil service law constitutional.

HESING DIES SUDDENLY.

Chicago's Former Postmaster Is Found Lifeless in His Apartments.

Washington Hesing, ex-postmaster of Chicago, twice candidate for Mayor, and president of the Illinois Staats Zeitung Company, and for many years a representative Chicago citizen, died Saturday evening while alone in his residence. The physicians who made the post mortem examination attributed death to heart failure, superinduced by malaria and la grippe.

He went to the Staats Zeitung office in the morning, and as usual discharged his editorial duties. He went home to luncheon with Mrs. Hesing and complained of no special illness. She left him in the early afternoon for social duties and he walked about the apartments. The servant spoke to him about 4 o'clock and he seemed well. Half an hour later, on entering his rooms, the girl noticed him on the couch and believed he was asleep. On the return of his wife at 5:30 she found him dead, the body still warm.

Washington Hesing was the son of Anton Caspar Hesing, conspicuous in Republican political and newspaper circles of Chicago for many years prior to and after the great fire. He was born in Cincinnati, May 14, 1849, and came with his parents to Chicago in 1854, remaining a resident of the city ever since, save when absent in travel or study at the universities.

He crowded into scarce half a century every experience that he could find in life, enjoyable or otherwise. The spirit of modern rush appeared to be ever upon him and to keep him to the fore. His schooling leaped from the common school to Osnabrueck, Hanover; his university life from the University of Chicago to Yale and from Yale to Berlin and Heidelberg. He read international law, literature of all nations, absorbed political economy and history.

Printer's devil, editorial writer, managing editor, president of a publishing concern, member of the Board of Education, president of the County Board of Education, postmaster, candidate for Mayor—all these things had been his.

PERISH IN A FIRE.

Six Persons Burned in the Hotel Dakota at Grand Forks.

At least six persons lost their lives in the burning of the Hotel Dakota at Grand Forks, N. D. The building was a six-story structure and was crowded with guests. It was bitterly cold and the occupants of the hotel, driven from the elevators by the dense smoke, were compelled to seek safety by means of the fire escapes. Dressed only in their night clothes they suffered greatly from the cold, but it is believed that all were rescued except six.

The fire started in the basement of Nash Bros.' wholesale building shortly after 4 o'clock and in less than twenty minutes the flames spread into the big Grand Forks Mercantile building adjoining and to the top floor of the Hotel Dakota. An alarm was immediately sounded. The guests and employes made a rush for the elevator, but those on the third, fourth and fifth floors were driven back by the smoke. The only refuge there seemed to be left were the fire escapes. As the register is burned, the number of dead is unknown.

The flames spread so rapidly that nothing of value was taken from any of the buildings. In the hotel everything was a total loss. The cost of the building was $108,000, exclusive of the furnishings, which were valued at $50,000. The insurance was $60,000. The wholesale cigar stock of W. W. Fegan & Co., valued at $7,500, was a total loss.

The other losses are: Grand Forks Mercantile Company, stock and fixtures, $95,000, building $40,000, insurance $65,000; Nash wholesale commission stock $75,000, building $40,000, insurance $60,000; L. H. Bergh, drug stock, $5,000; Jerry Daily, bar fixtures, $3,500; Fabel & Co., bowling alley and gymnasium, $3,500.

NEARLY A MILLION BIBLES.

Work of American Bible Society in Foreign Lands.

A statement issued by the American Bible Society concerning its work in foreign lands during the last year shows that it involved an expenditure of $192,292.32 and the circulation of 767,528 volumes of the holy scriptures. Of these more than half—405,000 volumes—were distributed in China, 50,000 in Japan, 57,000 in the Levant, 60,000 in South America, 33,000 in Central America and Mexico, 32,000 in Siam and Laos, 40,000 in Russia, 20,000 in France, 12,000 in Spain and Austria, 10,000 in India; besides smaller numbers in Africa, Arabia and Corea. In accomplishing this work the agents and correspondents of the society employed 382 men, each working on an average more than eight months. The distribution of the Bible is regarded as of prime importance in all foreign missionary operations, and the co-operation of the American Bible Society with the mission boards receives from them the most cordial recognition. Hence the society will issue an appeal to pastors and others, that in the special meetings which are to be held early in January in observance of the annual week of prayer due emphasis may be laid upon the importance of extending the circulation of the Bible among all nations during the closing years of the nineteenth century and especially in those parts of the world where the Bible is an unknown book.

Notes of Current Events.

The definite treaty of peace between Greece and Turkey has been signed at Constantinople.

John P. Jackson, of the New York Herald staff, died in Paris after an illness of three weeks from Bright's disease.

William Lakeland, trainer for Foxhall Keene, has bought from John E. Madden the great 2-year-old Hamburg. The price was $60,000.

DR. MARCUS WHITMAN.

A Missionary, He Did Not Forget to Be a Zealous American.

To commemorate the massacre of Dr. Marcus Whitman and his wife on Nov. 29, 1847, a marble shaft has been raised to his memory. The site of the monument is at Whitman Mission, just seven miles from Walla Walla, and here only recently the remains of the victims were disinterred and now lie in new-made graves on the same spot. It was through the efforts of Dr. Whitman that that portion of our country now comprising Oregon, Washington and Idaho, with portions of Wyoming and Montana, was saved to the Union.

DR. WHITMAN.

Previous to the final establishment of the boundary line between Canada and the United States by the treaty of 1846, the Hudson Bay Company was in virtual possession of that whole country. It opposed all efforts to civilize the Indians, for the reason that civilization would interfere seriously with their trade.

In 1832 four Indians came from Oregon to St. Louis, a journey of more than 3,000 miles, for the sole purpose of obtaining for their people the "Book from heaven," the white man's Bible. The Methodist Episcopal church sent out the Rev. Jason Lee and his associates in 1834, and in 1835 the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions sent the Rev. Samuel Parker and Dr. Marcus Whitman to explore the country.

On the strength of their report the Board Commissioned them to establish a mission among the Nez Perces, and sent two other laborers, the Rev. R. H. Spalding and his young wife to accompany them. Mrs. Spalding and Mrs. Whitman were the first white women to cross the Rocky Mountains. They reached Vancouver in September, 1836, having journeyed by wagon all the way and having proved it possible to take emigrant trains from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast.

In 1842 there were 322 Indian families which, under their tuition, had begun to cultivate the soil. In September of that year Dr. Whitman met at a dinner table at Walla Walla several of the chief officers of the Hudson Bay Company, and heard what convinced him that effort was being made to stimulate immigration from the British possessions and to raise over the whole Territory the British flag. Excusing his hasty departure, he rode twenty-five miles to his home, and before he had leaped from his saddle announced his purpose: "I am going to ride to Washington, God carrying me through, and bring out an immigration next season which will save this Territory to the United States."

Within twenty-four hours he had started, with one companion, who, worn out with toil and exposure, was obliged to remain at Bent's fort on the Arkansas River until spring. After suffering untold hardship, with his ears, face and hand frozen, Dr. Whitman reached St. Louis in February, 1843, and on March 3 he arrived in Washington, five months from the time of starting.

His first question on reaching civilization was as to the Ashburn treaty. He was told it had been concluded. "How about Oregon?" "Left out of the treaty," was the reply. The whole question of the boundary west of the Rocky Mountains had been reserved for future settlement. Dr. Whitman was able to give such information as to the value and the accessibility of the country as determined American statesmen not lightly to surrender it. Daniel Webster said to him that mountains and deserts made communication with Oregon impossible.

"I took a wagon over the mountains," replied Dr. Whitman, "and have the wagon now." The same summer Dr. Whitman conducted a party of nearly 900 emigrants, with 121 wagons, across the mountains into Oregon and practically settled the question as to which flag should float over the vast domain. Legal effect was given to it by the treaty of 1846.

The hostile influences, however, of the Hudson Bay Company and others continued to work on the minds of the Indians, with the result that on Nov. 29, 1847, he and his wife, with thirteen other persons, were foully massacred by the people they had come to benefit. Whitman College has since been founded there as a tribute to his memory. His grave has been hitherto unmarked, but a modest monument will henceforth indicate the spot where sleeps one of the benefactors of the republic.

Viviparous Fish.

A doubt that has troubled scientists for years—whether there exists a viviparous kind of fish, one that gives birth to its young in a living state—was definitely settled in the affirmative the other day when the City Hall fountain of the capital of Arizona Territory was cleaned out. In turning the water out of the big cement basin, where a goldfish variety of the carp family has long disported itself for the edification of the Phoenix nurse girl and the Maricopa County hobo, it was found that many of the fish had given birth to progeny fully formed and ready to dart about in search of food at the moment of coming into their watery world. Others had given birth to tiny creatures that were globular in shape, except for the protruding eyes and a nascent tail fin, that could scarcely be seen without a strong glass. From all evidences, it was clear that the clean-up had been made during the breeding season, yet there was no sign of fish roe or eggs. Many specimens of the strange young fish were collected, and will be shipped to different experts, one lot going to the Smithsonian Institution.—Phoenix (Ariz.) Correspondent St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

M'KINLEY'S FIRST SWEETHEART.

The Story of How He Wooed but Lost Miss Lydia Wadsworth.

Mrs. Lydia McMong, of Big Rapids, Mich., has at last consented to tell the story of the early romantic love passage between herself and the man who is now President of the United States.

Away back in the days of their blooming youth, when both lived in the village of Poland, Ohio, William wooed Mrs. McMong, then Miss Lydia

MRS. LYDIA M'MONG.

Wadsworth. She was a pretty girl with plenty of admirers, but of them all she favored but one, and that was William McKinley. The energetic lad wooed like a Napoleon, but he met his Waterloo at the hands of the old people. As soon as they discovered that the young couple were contemplating matrimony they interfered. McKinley was poor, and to the shrewd eye of John Wadsworth he did not appear like a man calculated to get on in the world, and for this reason he denied him the hand of his fair daughter. The usual result followed. Clandestine meetings and surreptitious correspondence was resorted to. Whispers of a possible elopement were wafted to the old folks' ears. They resolved upon stern measures and the romance was at an end.

There was in Poland a young man named McMong, who had persistently wooed the fair Lydia. Her parents favored his suit and declared that she must marry him. There was a stormy scene and the girl vowed that she would have the man of her choice or none, but in the end she yielded. She married McMong, who has been to her all that her parents anticipated. Today she is living in Big Rapids with her husband and two pretty daughters. Their home is cozy and comfortable, and they have the respect of the community and a substantial part in its social life.

Photographing a Stomach.

An electric lamp and camera have been invented for photographing the interior of the stomach. The invention is intended to assist in diagnosing obscure ailments, such as cancer of the stomach, and render laparotomy unnecessary. A perfect picture of the pyloric mucous membrane is said to have been obtained.

The camera is actually introduced into the stomach and exposed for from five to eight seconds, the light for photographing being supplied by a small incandescent lamp attached to it. No narcotics are required, as there is no pain connected with the operation. In early cases anesthesia was tried, but the movement of the stomach which occurs in deep anesthesia blurred the picture.

When the camera is introduced the patient holds his breath, which he can easily do for the short time of the exposure. By this means the movement of the membrane is prevented. The electric light, which is detachable, may first be introduced in order that an outline of the stomach be made externally on the abdomen, and at the same time the required length of tubing from the teeth of the focal point can be determined. There is a good deal of uncertainty connected with this method of exploring the inner organs of the abdominal section, but if it can be made anything like practicable it will, obviously, be of untold value to the pathologist.

An Accommodating Railroad.

"It used to be a standing joke," says the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, "that any obliging conductor on the Bangor and Piscataquis road would stop a train while a passenger got out and dug a mess of greens, and the writer once enjoyed a tarry in Piscataquis woods when the only apparent cause of the stop was to let some summer tourists gather some choice wild flowers that grew beside the track. It seems that the good old customs are still kept up there, as the Bangor paper reports that a train was stopped about half way across Bunker Brook trestle the other day to allow a photographer to get a picture of it, and also to take views of the beautiful scenery around there."

Mountain of Diamonds.

Some idea of the wealth of the South African diamond diggings may be formed from the fact that in twenty-six years no less than seventeen tons of those precious stones have been unearthed, aggregating in value $375,000,000; that the yearly output is now about $15,000,000, and that as old fields become less valuable new ones are being discovered, which promise to maintain the product. The profits of three diamond companies run from $7,500,000 to $8,500,000 each, with annual dividends of 40 per cent., and it is owing to the dexterous management of these monopolies that the price of diamonds has not been affected to any noticeable extent.—London Times.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Funds Withdrawn from Building and Loan Companies—Hull Receives a Life Sentence—Corporal Punishment for Incorrigible Pupils.

Heavy Withdrawal of Funds.

The report of the building and loan association department of the State Auditor's office shows that there has been a heavy withdrawal from the association during the year, and that, as compared with one year ago, the loans have fallen off more than 10 per cent. Fourteen associations in Indianapolis and a large number throughout the State have gone into voluntary liquidation during the year.

May Paddle Pupils.

The prosecution and acquittal of a teacher for punishing a pupil in the Muncie schools accidentally developed that there is an old statute, passed by the Legislature several decades ago, requiring that incorrigible pupils must be paddled or else expelled from school, the paddling to be by the consent of the guardian or parent and administered by the teacher.

Must Go to Prison for Life.

At Princeton, the jury in the Hull murder case returned a verdict declaring Samuel Hull, Jr., guilty of murder in the first degree and fixing his punishment at imprisonment for life. Before passing sentence Judge Duncan asked him if he had anything to say. He replied: "I am an innocent man." Hull is accused of murdering his father in the woods of Warrick County last May.

Ex-Convict Shoots His Wife.

Near Spearsville, John Taylor, aged 60, shot his wife in the right arm and was put in jail at Nashville. About four years ago Taylor was sentenced to the penitentiary for the murder of his former wife, but was released after two years.

Oppose Unconditional Coeducation.

The trustees of Wabash College at Crawfordsville met and declared themselves as opposed to unconditional co-education, but favored co-ordinate education in case an endowment was made for that purpose.

Within Our Borders.

At Kokomo, George Adrian was killed by getting caught in a line shaft.

By order of the police department slot machines have disappeared from Indianapolis.

The large sawmill of W. S. Robbins at Matthews was burned. Loss, $1,500; no insurance.

Anderson, Alexandria, Muncie and Hartford City bowlers are organizing an Indiana league.

Peter Schnell, a Jasper grain dealer, has left for Mexico. Seven men are on his bond for $40,000.

The schools at McCool have been closed on account of diphtheria epidemic, two deaths being reported.

At Muncie, the feed mill of A. R. Baldwin was destroyed by fire. Loss, $2,700, with insurance of $400.

Burglars entered the residence of Jas. B. Smockton at Flora and secured about $350 in cash and $75 in goods.

At Jeffersonville, Jefferson Davis was sentenced to the State's prison for assault and battery with intent to kill.

At Chesterton Engineer Arthur Case of the Lake Shore road was struck by a fast train and was instantly killed.

J. Otis Andreas & Sons, wholesale grocers at South Bend, have failed. The assets will more than pay the debts.

At Marion, Isaac Bradford, who was accused of embezzlement, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to the penitentiary.

Marshal Murphy of Patoka was fatally shot by a colored boy named Decker, whom he was trying to arrest for forgery.

John Sudbrink, a Terre Haute law student, has received an appointment to a $1,100 position in the congressional library.

David Mittank, a farmer, was found dead in the woods near Marion. The coroner's verdict was death from natural causes.

Mrs. Ammon, a South Bend hotel waiter, is one of the heirs to the $300,000 estate of W. H. Tribbette, who died in Mississippi.

At Terre Haute, the jury in the case of Mrs. Cruikshanks, charged with murdering her husband, brought in a verdict of acquittal.

The 107 pieces of silverware which were stolen last July from ex-Gov. Matthews, near Clinton, were found beneath a haystack.

A 4-year-old child of Albert Wittenmeyer fell into a tub of boiling water at Emison and was so badly scalded that it died soon after.

At Princeton, Albert F. Greek, a wealthy stockman, was killed by falling from a train while it was standing on a trestle sixty feet high.

Wilbur Sanders has suddenly disappeared from Shelbyville. Two forged notes for $25 each have turned up. Sanders holds a township office.

At Valparaiso, the case of ex-Sheriff Heber Stoddard was stricken from the docket in the Porter Circuit Court on motion of Prosecutor Heard.

Jefferson Rogers, a farmer living near Scottsburg, choked to death while eating pork. The meat lodged in his windpipe and could not be removed.

C. B. Reynolds, claiming to represent a St. Paul, Minn., firm, victimized many farmers about Valparaiso by giving alleged worthless checks for horses.

At Hartford City, Fred Reed, a high school student, became suddenly unconscious at his home. It is believed his heart is affected on account of smoking cigarettes.

CHRISTMAS SHIPS.

Blow fair, sweet wind, upon the distant seas;
Blow fair, and kind,
For many sails sue for a favoring breeze
Where none they find.
Your grace they court,
For Christmas port.

Some ride the waves with strong and buoyant prow,
And canvas white;
Others with straining spars the dark seas plough
In piteous plight.
Make them your care.
Kind wind, blow fair.

Many are faring home from havens far,
After long years;
And eyes are gazing out across the bar
Through gathering tears.
Bring the ship near,
For Christmas cheer.

Wherever ships should speed upon the wave,
Go, friendly breeze;
But when the billows fiercely rock and rave,
Lull them to ease.
Let joy abide
At Christmas-tide!

COMRADES.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

It was the day before Christmas.

Outside the snow was falling thick and fast, and the wind was whirling it into drifts along the fences and heaping it in the hollows of the orchard above the russet leaves that had gathered there. Grandmother Waite stood at the window of the old house on the hill that had been her home for a good many years, and looked out into the storm with a pitiful sadness in her thin, worn face.

"T'morrer's Christmas Day," she said, shivering in the wintry air that came in through the broken panes. "Christmas Day, but they're goin' to turn us out o' house an' home, Rover." This to the old dog who had followed her to the window. "It don't look much like home," with a glance about the little bare room, "but it's all the place we've got to call so, an' we've kind o' got 'tached to it if 'tain't very pleasant, hain't we, Rover? Dear me! To think that I'm eighty past, an' they can't let me die in peace. It's a hard world for old folks, Rover, 'specially when they're poor an' hain't got any friends, like us.'

She turned away from the window and sat down by the broken old stove, through whose cracks a smoldering fire sent out a feeble glow of light and but little warmth. Rover came and laid his head upon her knee, and looked up into her face as if to say, "It may be a hard world, but you aren't quite without friends; you've got me yet."

Grandma Waite laid her wrinkled hand on the dog's head and patted it lovingly.

"If they'd only let us stay here," she said. "It wouldn't be for long. When one gets to be eighty, past, the end can't be fur off. But they won't. 'You'll have to go,' they said. They talked as if they was doin' it out o' kindness. 'Tain't safe for an ol' woman like you to stay here alone,' they said, 'an' you'll be better off there, for Job Green's a relation, an' he'll take good care o' ye.' But I don't want to go there. Job Green don't want me. He knows how hard a time I've had of it along back, an' he hain't never be'n nigh me. But he's afraid the town's goin' to do somethin' with me, an' he don't want it said a relation o' his is on the town, so he's offered to take me. They needn't worry about me. I've earnt my livin' by knittin' an' doin' odd jobs, an' I can do it yet if they'd let me. I hain't asked nobody for anything. But there I hadn't ought to talk like that about the neighbors, for they've be'n dretful kind to me. Mebbe they do think it'll be better for me over to Job's, but I know better. It'll be Job's place, an' I'll be stayin' with him, an' I won't feel free an' unbeholdin' 's I do now. But I don't s'pose I can help myself. They said he'd be over after me bright an' early in the mornin', an'—we'll have to go."

The dog whined out his sympathy and licked her trembling hands.

"You love me, don't you, Rover?" she whispered, breaking down and sobbing pitifully. "You've be'n a better friend to me than them I felt sure I could depend on. We've lived together a good many years, an' we'll stay by each other to the last. Whatever else they do, we won't let 'em part us, will we, Rover?"

There was a knock at the door.

Grandma Waite wiped her eyes hastily on the corner of her apron, and went to open it.

"How d' ye do, Gran'ma?" said her visitor as she came into the room, shaking the snow from her shawl. "We was goin' by—goin' over to Greensboro' to spend Christmas with Daughter Ellen, you know—an' I says to father, 'I'm goin' to run in to say good-bye to Gran'ma Waite, for she'll be gone 'fore we get back, an' mebbe 't 'll quite a spell 'fore I git to see her ag'in.' You're calcilatin' to go in the mornin', I s'pose?"

"Yes, I reckon I'll have to," answered Grandma Waite, with a quiver of the lip. "But I tell ye, Mis' Holdredge, it comes hard."

"I wouldn't wonder," responded Mrs. Holdredge. "It must, seein's you've be'n here so long. But I don't think you ought to feel hard to'rds the neighbors, Grandma. 'Tain't right fer you to stay alone here, at your age. Somethin's likely to happen to you any time. Job Green's able to take care of ye, an' it's his place to, seein' 's about all he's got come from your folks by his marryin' Matildy. I hope you'll have a real good home there, an' a chance to take things easy. You mus' come over nex' summer, an' stay a good long spell, an' visit 'round 'mongst all the neighbors. We'll be dretful glad to see ye. There, father's callin', an' I'll have to go. Well, good-bye to ye, Gran'ma," and Mrs. Holdredge shook hands with the old woman, who could not trust herself to speak.

She followed her old neighbor to the door with tears streaming down her face, and stood there watching the sleigh until it was out of sight. Then she went back to the seat by the stove, and Rover came and laid down beside her. Presently there was another knock at the door.

"I wonder who 't is now?" thought Grandma Waite, as she went to admit the visitor. It was a man in a great fur coat, with a big cap pulled well down over his ears.

"How are ye?" he said, as he stamped the snow from his feet. "Don't know me, do ye? Wall, I don't wonder, I'm bundled up so. I sh'd think you could tell my voice, tho'."

"It ain't Job Green, is it?" asked Grandma Waite.

"You've hit it," was the reply. "I s'pose you wa'n't lookin' for me till to-morrer. But I wanted to see a man over to Greensboro' 'bout some cows he's got to sell, an' I thought I'd go over there to-day an' stop an' git ye when I go back in the mornin'. Git your traps packed an' be ready 'bout ten o'clock. I s'pose ye hain't got much to bother with?" with a look about the poor little room.

"There ain't much 'cepting me an' Rover," said Grandma Waite.

"I hope you don't reckon on takin' that dog along?" said Job Green in surprise. "I don't want him around—wouldn't have him on the premises for anything. You'll hev to get red of him, some way."

"Oh, I can't let Rover go!" cried Grandma Waite, turning pale and shaking all over. "I can't! He b'longed to Sarah's boy, that died, an' I set by him 's much I would by a person. I can't go unless he does. I won't!" she cried with sudden energy, called out by the fear of losing her old friend.

"But you'll have to," said Job Green in a tone that meant his will was to be her law. "If you don't want to leave him to take care of himself, you can have him shot."

"Shot!"

Grandma Waite sank down on the floor by her old friend, and put her arms around his neck and hid her face in his shaggy coat, while sobs shook her from head to feet.

"I don't see the sense o' yer takin' on so," said Job Green harshly. "He's nothin' but a dog, an' I can't be bothered with him."

"Nothin' but a dog, mebbe," sobbed the poor old creature, "but sometimes dogs air better friends to us than folks be. I can't part with him."

"Wall, I ain't a-goin' to argy the matter with ye," said the man, unfeelingly. "But the dog can't go to my place, an' that settles it. I'll take you, jest as I've said I would, but I won't take him. I'm a-goin' now, an' you can think it over 'twixt now an' the time I come back. I hope you'll look at it sensible, an' make up yer mind to get red of him. Shootin's a good way, fer it's quick an' easy, an' I've got somethin' in my pocket to do it with. Be reddy by ten," and Job Green was gone.

Grandma Waite sat down by the stove again with a strange, tense look in her face. Rover came and laid down at her feet. The two old friends were very quiet for a long time.

"Oh, to think they want to have you shot!" she cried out at last, getting down on her knees and putting her arms around the dog's neck again. "I'll die first! They sha'n't part us, Rover."

Rover whined and put his nose against her face.

"I know what I'm goin' to do," Grandma Waite cried with a sudden energy that seemed to make a younger woman of her. "I'm goin' to the poor-house. I used to think I'd ruther die than go there, but one can't die because they want to. I don't b'leeve they'll refuse to let me keep you there, Rover. It don't seem 's ef they could, when I tell them what a friend you've been to me, an' how you b'longed to Sarah's boy, that died. I can work enough to pay for your keepin', I know."

The night was beginning to close in. The snow was no longer falling. In the west a long streak of yellow showed where the sun was setting as Grandma Waite went to the window and looked out.

"We'll wait till it gets so late we won't be likely to meet anybody, an' then we'll start," she said to the dog. "I don't want to meet anybody if I can help it, fer mebbe they'd make us come back if they found out where we was goin.'"

She got out the old black-and-white plaid shawl that had done duty for a score of years, and her brown woolen hood, and the leggins Mrs. Peasly had given her a year ago last Christmas, and laid them all on the table. "We'll be ready to start as soon 's it's safe," she said. Then she filled the stove with wood and put the tea-kettle on.

"We'll eat somethin', for we've got a good long ways to go," she said to the dog, "an' 'twouldn't do to start out with an empty stummick."

She made her a cup of tea and ate some bread, while Rover munched at the crusts she gave him with evident relish.

"I'll share my last mossel with you, old friend," she said, stooping down to pat his head, and he thumped the floor with his tail, as if in that way he could express his appreciation of her friendship better than in any other.

Once in a while she heard the sound of bells. By and bye, these sounds ceased.

"It mus' be gettin' nigh on to ten," she said. "I guess it's time to start."

She put on her things in a nervous eagerness that told how excited she was over her undertaking.

"There, I guess I'm ready," she said, as she tied on her hood. "Come, Rover, we'll be goin'."

She gave one more look about the room before she left it forever.

"It's a poor place," she said, with a break in her voice and a quivering lip, "but it's be'n home to us, after all." Then they went out into the night.

The snow was half knee-deep in many places, and the old woman found it hard work to struggle through it. Here and there the wind had blown the the roads almost bare, and when she came to such spots, where it was easier walking, she got back a little breath.

"I don't just seem to remember how fur't is to the poor-house," she said to her companion, as he trudged along by her side. "But it's a good long ways, an' I shouldn't wonder if I was all tired out when I gat there. I know it's reeky for an old woman like me to start out on such a tramp, but—I won't go to Job Green's if I can't take you, Rover," with a pat for the animal's shaggy head. "We've be'n friends too long to be sep'rated now." More than once she said this as they went on their journey, and the dog would lick her hand and look up into her face with a look that said as plainly as words could: "I'm a dog, but I'm a friend to be trusted. You can depend on me."

By and bye, Grandma Waite began to realize that she was getting very tired. Her limbs shook under her every time she paused to get breath.

"I don't know 's I'm goin' to hold out to get there," she said, wearily. "But if I die by the roadside, I'll have my best friend by me."

On and on the two comrades went. By and bye Grandma Waite sank down as if all strength had suddenly gone out of her.

"I'm givin' out," she moaned. "God help us, Rover, but you won't leave me, will you?"

She saw something ahead that looked like a great rock by the roadside to her blurred eyes.

"If I can get to it mebbe it'll keep the wind off," she said, and struggled on again.

The "rock" was reached at last, and proved to be a load of hay that had been overturned and was left there by its owner.

"We'll rest a spell," she said, as she sank down by the sheltering heap. "Come and lay down by me, Rover; you'll keep me from gettin' cold. You're 'most as warm's a feather-bed," and Grandma Waite laughed in a way that told that her mind was beginning to wander, like herself.

Rover snuggled down beside her, and she spread her shawl over him as tenderly as if he had been a child in her care.

"We'll share with each other," she said. "That's the way friends ought to. They sha'n't sep'rate us," and she put her arms about the faithful friend's neck and leaned upon his warm body. "No, Rover, they sha'n't part us 's long's I can help it."

The wind began to blow presently, and it gathered up great handfuls of snow by the roadside and scattered it over the two comrades, who seemed to have fallen asleep by the load of hay, so quiet were they. And by and bye they were so covered by its cold, white beauty that the stars of Christmas morning could not see them as they looked down upon the sleeping world.

"There's that dog howlin' ag'in," said Mrs. Mason, as she came out of the bedroom on Christmas morning. "I've heard it ever sence about four o'clock, an' it seems real clost by. I wonder whose 't is?"

"I'll go an' see," said Mr. Mason, as he gave the kitchen fire a stirring that made it roar briskly. "It sounds 's ef it come from that load o' hay I tipped over las' night."

About ten minutes later his wife looked out and saw him coming up the path with a woman in his arms, and a dog by his side jumping and barking as if in great delight.

"For the lan's sake!" cried Mrs. Mason, running to the door. "Who have you got there, James?"

"I don't know," answered her husband. "It's a woman I found in the snow down by the load o' hay. I reckon she's about chilled to death. Get her into some warm clo'es as quick as you can, an' I'll get the kittle to b'ilin' so you can make her some hot tea. It's a wonder if she ain't froze."

"The poor thing!" said Mrs. Mason, stripping off Grandma Waite's clothing. "I declare, it's awful to think o' her bein' exposed in that way an' shelter so near."

Grandma Waite was unconscious at first, but by and bye a sense of warmth began to steal through her limbs, and the wheels of life that had almost stopped began to go again. She opened her eyes and looked about her. She saw kind faces bending over her, she felt the contact of warm hands chafing her chilled limbs, and she heard the sound of sympathetic voices.

"Where be I?" she asked. "Did I die?"

"No, you didn't, as luck would have it," answered Mrs. Mason, tucking a great woolen blanket about her feet.

"Where's Rover?" asked Grandma Waite. "There hain't anything happened to him, has there?" and her face was full of alarm.

The dog, hearing her speak his name, came and stood by her, wagging his tail.

"If it hadn't been for the dog, I wouldn't wonder a bit if you had died," said Mrs. Mason. "We heard him barkin', an' that's how my husban' come to find you. I'm jest a-dyin' to know how you come to be there."

"I was lookin' for the poor-house," said Grandma Waite.

"For the poor-house!" cried Mrs. Mason. "Deary me, hain't you got no other place to go to?"

Grandma Waite told her story in a disjointed sort of way, but her listeners got a pretty correct idea of how matters stood.

"I couldn't be sep'rated from Rover," Grandma said, as she ended her touching story. "It 'u'd break my heart to part with him, for he b'longed to Sarah's boy that died. An' you've be'n my best friend, hain't you, Rover?" with a sob.

Mrs. Mason's face was wet with tears as she looked at her husband.

"You shan't be parted from your old friend," he said, and his eyes were full of a suspicious moisture. "An' you needn't talk about goin' to the poor-house, either. You can stay here, if you want to."

"Oh, you don't mean it?" cried Grandma Waite, incredulously. "I ain't none o' your flesh an' blood."

"But you're one o' God's children, an' that makes us relations," said Mrs. Mason tenderly. "I knew what you'd say, James, an' I'm glad you feel like takin' her in. If 'twas our mother, we'd be glad to have somebody do it for her."

"I can knit, an' wash dishes, an' do lots o' work," said Grandma Waite. "I'll try hard to pay my way an' not be any trouble if you'll let me stay—me an' Rover. I can't stay if he don't."

"We'll keep both of you," said Mr. Mason, "so don't worry. Did you say your name was Waite. Seems to me that was the name o' the fam'ly where your brother John stayed when he had the typhoid fever an' would ha' died, the doctor said, if 't hadn't be'n fer the care he got. Did you ever live over to Greensboro', ma'am?"

"Yes, more'n a dozen years ago," answered Grandma Waite. "An' I shouldn't wonder if 'twas as you s'r-mise, for a young man that was 'tending school there got sick, an' we took him in, an' he come dretful near dyin' with the fever. His name was Palmer."

"Then 'twas my brother," cried Mrs. Mason, with shining eyes. "Ain't it queer, now, how things come about? You took care o' him, an' now we're goin' to have a chance to pay back by takin' care o' you when you need it. I'm so glad it's happened so. Now, you jest stop worryin' 'bout things, an' rest an' feel yourself right to home. Why, James," suddenly, "it's Christmas mornin', ain't it? I declare, I'd forgot all about it. Merry Christmas to you," and Mrs. Mason kissed Grandma Waite's wrinkled cheek and gave her a hug that made her feel warm all over with the heartiness that was in it.

"Merry Christmas, ma'am," said Mr. Mason, holding out his hand. "Glad we're goin' to have some comp'ny to help us eat turkey."

Grandma Waite began to cry softly.

"Let her; it'll do her good," said Mrs. Mason, as she wiped her eyes on the corner of her apron again.

Rover came and laid his head on the arm of the rocking-chair and looked up into his comrade's face.

"He knows all about it," said Grandma Waite, "an' he's tryin' to tell me he's glad, too." Then she put her arms about the old dog's neck, and added: "It's all right now, Rover; we're goin' to be took care of, an' I'm goin' to pay our way, an', we ain't goin' to be sep'rated. No, no; they ain't goin' to part two old frien's like us, after all."

Then she bent her head and said reverently: "Dear God, you know how glad an' thankful we be 'thout our tellin' you. God bless these kind frien's an' all the world this Christmas Day. Amen"

And the man and woman who listened to this prayer, that said so little but meant so much, said softly after her, "Amen!"—Ladies' World.

SANTA CLAUS WAS A REAL MAN.

The "Truly-Truly" St. Nick and the Legends of His Life.

Some grown-ups and older children imagine there never was any real Santa Claus; but they ought to know better. Nicholas, the patron saint of Christmastide, was a bishop of the church in Asia Minor, where he died in 343. His bones were removed to Bari, Italy, in 1307, where they now rest, under the crypt of the church which bears his name.

A writer in Chambers's "Book of Days" interestingly describes the celebration of St. Nicholas day at Bari. On that day the town is thronged with pilgrims from all the country round. When they reach the church they show their devotion by walking around it—if it can be called walking— on their knees, and some of them even do it with their foreheads to the floor, each being guided by a child, who leads the pilgrim with a handkerchief of which he holds a corner in his mouth. Each pilgrim is entitled to a meal without cost, and on the especial occasion described over nine thousand were fed. Water comes up through the floor of the crypt over the grave of St. Nicholas, and this is supposed to have great curative powers. It is gathered in sponges, squeezed into bottles and sold to the pilgrims. It is called the manna of St. Nicholas.

St. Nicholas was the patron saint of children, of virgins and of sailors, and countless stories have come down to us of his tender and constant protection of those under his care.

The observance of St. Nicholas day which connects it with the Christmas customs of the present era is the ancient one of filling shoes with little gifts which were supposed to have been left there by the saint, says the "Monthly Illustrator." It was also the custom of old in certain convents for the boarders to leave each a silk stocking at the door of the abbess on the eve of St. Nicholas, and these they would find in the morning filled with sweetmeats or other trifles to show that they were held in remembrance.

Children were told that St. Nicholas threw the presents for them in at the window, and the main point is clear enough—that he is the same person who, as Santa Claus, rides on Christmas eve all over every part of the world where good children live, with his sledge and his reindeers, and comes down the chimneys to fill the stockings hung up to await him with all sorts of things to delight childish hearts, somewhere far up in the Arctic circle, making toys and boiling sugar into candy to distribute the next Christmas.

Mistletoe at Yuletide.

The connection of mistletoe with Christmas is a very curious one and far from being a general one. Literature is perhaps mainly responsible for it in that allusions to a custom in a great degree purely local, have made a large number of persons interested in the plant. It, moreover, seems to me that the custom of using it in Christmas decorations depends on two considerations—first, its evergreen habit, and, secondly, the veneration in which it was held by the Druids. In the orchards of Herefordshire and Worcestershire in England and in those of Normandy apple trees may be seen covered with mistletoe to such an extent that in winter time, when divested of their natural leaves, they present a mass of green in the leaves of their parasite, says the Philadelphia Press.

The reasons mentioned have no doubt done much to secure for the mistletoe the place which in recent times it has held in Christmas festivities, but it is not so universally honored at Yuletide as the holly. In fact, its popularity is purely local, and its use as an ornament in places where it does not grow is due rather to an antiquarian sentiment than to any feeling that its presence at the rejoicings of the season is necessary. You may have a very merry Christmas without any mistletoe at all, but to the majority of people a Christmas without a sprig or two of holly would scarcely seem to be Christmas at all. Even that rare old plant the ivy green cannot compete with the holly as a necessary part of domestic adornment for the Christmas merry gatherings.

Still, mistletoe has a certain amount of sentiment attached to it, and therefore the mistletoe bough finds a place in the farm houses, mansions and castles of the districts of England where it grows, and in the dwellings of the wealthy where it can be purchased, while here a sprig is bought just for the sake of old memories.

DEER IN ABUNDANCE.

THE WISCONSIN AND MICHIGAN WOODS FULL OF THEM.

Exceptional Number of Animals Observed in Hunting Grounds—Methods of the Skilled Woodman in Approaching His Antlered Game.

How They Are Hunted.

Within a night's ride of Chicago deer and bear may be found in good numbers. Yet a little further into the wilderness such an abundance of deer has not been seen for many years. In the wilds of Wisconsin and throughout Northern Michigan deer are so plentiful that the "still" hunters have had no trouble in "walking up" game in any likely piece of woods.

Wisconsin always has been a good deer country. Food is abundant, the wods are large and there is just such a variety of country as the deer loves for a habitation. He can wander over hills, through thick swamps or open woods, and all around is silence save what noise is made by the chirping birds and wild creatures like himself. He loves to feed a little on the lowlands and then browse on the high ground. It takes him a long time to make a meal, and no matter how much of good food there may be in any particular place he will not remain there to thoroughly satisfy his appetite. He must roam about and eat over a great deal of territory. When he has browsed and fed till he is content he loves to pose behind a clump of bushes and watch and listen. At such times he stands with head up as stanch as a setter on point, and if one watches him closely not a movement of his muscles will be detected. He sweeps the country before him with his keen eyes, and his sharp ears will be disturbed by the breaking of a twig anywhere within gunshot.

When the day is still the deer is confident he can outwit the enemy who tries to creep up on him with shotgun or rifle. But when the wind blows he fears to trust himself in those places where he may easily be approached by man, so he hides in the thickets and remains very quiet until night. To kill a deer on a still day when he is not difficult to find the hunter must match the deer in cunning and must possess a marked degree of patience. The deer, conscious of his own craftiness, wanders slowly through the woods, but he does not go far before he stops, and like a statue he stands and can only be made out by the hunter with a knowledge of his ways and a trained eye.

IN THE WOODS OF NORTHERN WISCONSIN.

The deer listens for a footfall. Should the hunter be anywhere within the range of his ear and step on a twig, the deer is off with a bound. He does not stop until he has reached what he regards as a safe locality in which to look and listen again. A man moving cautiously behind a clump of bushes anywhere within the sweep of his vision will start him off on the run, for he is seldom willing to take even a small chance against man. Should the coast be clear the deer will break his pose, browse and wander about again and finally make his bed under the top of a fallen tree or in some little thicket.

To capture the deer by the still-hunting method the hunter must know his ways and outwit him at his own game. First of all the still hunter wears soft shoes and when he puts his foot on the ground he is careful not to set it on a twig which will snap and frighten any deer that may be in the vicinity. The still hunter proceeds at once to put into practice the very system which the deer has taught him. He strikes a pose. He listens and looks. A deer standing like a statue 200 yards away is not likely to be detected by an inexperienced hunter, but the expert is not deceived. He has learned to look closely into the detail of the picture before him and he will note the difference between a set of antlers and a bush.

The brown sides of a deer are very indistinct when they have for a background a clump of brown bushes. But the expert still hunter sits quietly on a log and peers into the distance steadily, examining all details before him. Occasionally his fancy will help him to make a deer's haunch out of a hump on a tree or he will fancy he sees an antler mixed with the small branches of a bush, but his trained eye finally removes all doubt. But he is in no hurry. He is like the deer, patient, keen of sight and quick of hearing. He knows that if there are any deer on their feet in his vicinity he will get his eyes on them if he takes the time or if he waits long enough he is likely to see them on the move. At all events he must see the deer first. Then he must get near enough to him to bring him down with his rifle.

Still hunting is the popular method in Wisconsin. Hunting with hounds is forbidden by law. Another method used with success is what is called "breasting." Several hunters walk through the woods in line, a good gunshot apart. A similar line is formed in another portion of the woods, and the men in both lines walk toward each other. Whatever deer may be lying down are jumped and the hunters take a chance at getting a snap shot as the deer starts away. If he runs down the line he may get shot or if he goes straight away he may eventually run afoul of the other line of hunters. Half a dozen men hunting in two lines in this way are likely to bag several deer in a morning's hunt.

Several years ago the market hunters played havoc with the deer in the northern woods. They made it a business to hunt in all manner of ways and were so successful that it became necessary to make and enforce laws for the animal's protection. A favorite method of the market hunter was to "shine" deer at night. The deer, moving about feeding, would be attracted by a huge lamp. His curiosity would lead him to come near enough to the light to be reached by the hunter's gun, fired from a convenient ambush.

Hounds drove and harried the deer so much that it was found necessary to prohibit the chasing of deer with dogs. Under the protection of stringent laws the woods have been made to abound with deer.

CLEANING POSTALS.

Process to Remove Printing from Uncanceled Cards.

An advertisement has appeared in some of the daily papers, in which a cash payment has been offered for uncanceled printed postal cards. This was all that was stated, and as it seemed to be out of the general run of advertisements, a call was made on the advertiser to find out the object of this offer.

It seems that many business houses have occasion to have a large number of postal cards printed, to advertise some special line of goods or for the use of some traveling man. For some reason or other the conditions may change, so that perhaps only half of the cards are used. Being printed, they cannot be used in any other way, and the result is that in nine cases out of ten they are consigned to the waste basket, as the Government does not redeem uncanceled postal cards as it does stamped envelopes.

A process has been discovered by which all of the printed matter may be removed from the card, leaving it in the same condition as when bought at the postoffice. A charge of ½ cent per card is made for this work, or in other words, a man sends 500 cards to be "made over." The man who does the work charges $2.50 for his services, and the customer saves $2.50, as the printed cards were of no use to him.

The process by which this work is accomplished is not patented, as the inventor is fearful that after the ingredients become known, some one else may change them enough to escape an infringement, but at the same time obtain the same result. The solution is made at night, after the factory hands have gone home, and is given them the next day to use. The scheme has been in operation for six months only, but the inventor has letters from all parts of the country from prominent business houses, that have taken advantage of this offer to save 50 cents on the dollar, and he feels sure he has got a business that, after it has become known, will prove a good paying investment.—Boston Transcript.

LESSON IN PALMISTRY.

The Line of Mars Indicates Deceit, Policy and Tact.

The line of Mars, which the drawing indicates in a somewhat exaggerated form by a black stripe, is not found in all hands. In fact, it is seldom found developed to a considerable extent, and this is well. It is a sort of sister line to the line of life, but it seldom is so long. It leaves the line of life usually between the thumb and forefinger and starts across the Mount of Venus, rarely extending more than half the distance. This line indicates deceit, policy and tact. Society favorites usually have the line, and it enables them to smooth matters and to always avoid trouble. When it is fully developed the person is tricky, but usually deceives the persons deceived into believing that everything is all right.

THE LINE OF MARS.

Mustaches Sacrificed for Safety.

Men exposed to the rigors of the Alaska winter never wear mustaches. They wear full beards to protect the throat and face, but keep the upper lip clean shaven. The moisture from the breath congeals so quickly that a mustache becomes imbedded in a solid cake of ice and the face is frozen before a man knows it.

What has become of the old fashioned man who sometimes wore two pairs of spectacles on his nose?

Confectioners should make their candy over bon-bon fires.

WAS PULLMAN'S MODEL-MAKER.

Job W. Massey Made the Plans of the First Dining Car.

Job W. Massey is a farmer, living about nine miles north of Charleston, Ill. The death of George M. Pullman has brought to light the fact that Mr. Massey was at one time associated with the palace car magnate.

In 1860 Mr. Massey was a model-maker in Chicago. He furnished the "mechanical brains" for men who had bright ideas, but not the skill to execute them. Through the channels of business Massey became acquainted with the manager of the Pullman car mechanical department, a man named Longstreet, and afterward with Pullman himself. His first work with the Pullman people was the devising of a coil spring to lift and hold in place the berths in a sleeper. This was about the time that the construction of the dining car was worrying the railroad people.

JOB W. MASSEY.

One day Massey and Longstreet went to the yards, and Massey sketched a car in the outlines, or skeleton. Then he went to work on the model. It took him the whole summer, and while the work was in progress hundreds of visitors were attracted where the tiny car was being constructed. A rule of the patent office still in force prohibits the offering of a model more than twelve inches in length, but in this instance special permission was obtained from the commissioner to make a model twenty inches long, yet, with this additional advantage, the car was very diminutive, and required the most delicate and intricate work. After three months of patient labor Massey sent his model to Washington. He says it was as pretty a piece of work as any ever submitted to the commissioner of patents. The car was perfect in every respect. The seats, four to each table, were upholstered, the doors were hung with silver-plated hinges, the kitchen, with its range, shelves, sink, cellar, etc., was true to life. Job W. Massey won the prize and George M. Pullman reaped the fruits thereof.

After the fire in 1871 Mr. Massey left Chicago, went to Coles County and engaged in farming. He is a man of fine intellect and polished manners.

FREAK HOOSIER TREES.

Sugar Maples that Are United in Regular Siamese Twin Style.

A "freak" Ohio tree or trees has aroused the pride of Indianians, and Martinsville, Ind., steps to the fore with the claim that she has the greatest case of Siamese twins of the forest on record. The picture shows what this Hoosier freak looks like. The trees which are so peculiarly united are sugar maples and are about 12 inches in diameter. They are fully 20 feet apart. As can be seen, the limb from one tree has grown over and united with the trunk of the other. The limb is almost equal in diameter to the body of either tree, and is about 18 feet from the ground. The trees are on the Mitchell farm, within three-fourths of a mile of Martinsville, Ind., and are pointed out to sightseers as banner attractions.

"SIAMESE TWINS" TREES.

The Reindeer's Warm Coat.

The skin of the reindeer is so impervious to the cold that any one clothed in such a dress, with the addition of a blanket of the same material, may bear the intensest rigors of an Arctic winter's night.

What the average Kentuckian needs is a waterproof coat for his stomach.

The Dipper or the Dropper?

There are cough medicines that are taken as freely as a drink of water from a dipper. They are cheap medicines. Quantity does not make up for quality. It's the quality that cures. There's one medicine that's dropped, not dipped—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There's more power in drops of this remedy than in dippersful of cheap cough syrups and elixirs. It cures Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, and all Colds, Coughs, and affections of the Throat and Lungs.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is now HALF PRICE for the half-size bottles—50 cents.

RECEPTION

To Be Given By The Rebekah Wednesday Evening.

At the I. O. O. F. Hall Wednesday evening after lodge closes, all Rebekah's and their hus bands are requested to be present and participate in a general good social time. Light refreshments will be served by Sisters Rakestraw and Bishop.

A GREAT DEAL

of unecessary expenditure of time and money may be saved if you will only keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in the house. Nine tenths of all ordinary sickness is from the stomach; keep that organ in proper condition and all will be well. Syrup Pepsin is a specific. Trial size bottles 10c, large sizes 50c and $100, at Davenport's drugstore.

FARM FOR SALE.

A farm of 60 acres of well improved land, southeast of Hicksville, 50 acres under cultivation. Good water and young orchard; good frame house and barn. Consideration 2,500 easy payments. For further information inquire at this office.

KANKAKEE MARSHES

The Laporte Argus, in speaking of the great ditch that is to drain the wet lands of these marshes says that at a recent meeting of the directors an important change in the ditch was decided on. They propose now to make it narrower so the bottom will be but 40 ft wide with a slope of 18 inches for every one foot in depth, instead of a bottom 60 ft wide as formally designed. It is expected that this will save about $3,000 per mile in the cost of the ditch. It was also decided to hold a meeting of the members of the association on January 29 for the purpose of electing new directors and it is then expected to push the work ahead as fast as possible.

RIGHT IN IT.

That's where Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is. The greatest remedy for the stomach that was ever put together. Absolutely vegetable with the exception of the Pepsin. Are you constipated? Then try Syrup Pepsin. Have you indigestion or sick headache? Then try Syrup Pepsin. Spend 10c. for a trial bottle and you will be convinced. Large sizes 50c and $1.00. A true family remedy. At F. E. Davenport's.

POSTPONED.

The gentlemen of the Presbyterian church have posponed the social they intended to give Saturday evening. There is too much going on now. I will be given later.

—Laporte Argus:—The Washington Post is authority for the statement that this administration can only find a place for one in eighty of the applicants for office only 79 will be mad and get in their work at the next election. There is but little doubt about the approximate truth of this.

MILES AND KNOTS.

Some Information That Is Well Worth Remembering.

Distances at sea are measured in miles, just as they are on land, but the speed of a ship at sea—that is, the number of miles she makes through the water in one hour of time—is measured in knots. There is therefore a difference in the meaning of the word "mile" and "knot;" they are no more synonymous than are the words "distance" and "speed," to which they are correlated. It is well to bear in mind, in speaking or writing of nautical matters, this distinction, that a mile is a unit of distance, but a knot is a unit of speed. There are two kinds of a mile—a statute or land mile and a nautical or sea mile. A statute mile is 5,280 feet. It is our standard of itinerary measure adopted from the English, who in turn adopted it from the Romans. A Roman military pace, by which distances were measured, was the length of the step taken by the Roman soldiers, and was approximately five feet long; a thousand of these paces were called in Latin a mile. The English mile is therefore a purely arbitrary measure, enacted into a legal measure by a statute passed during the reign of Queen Elizabeth; it has no connection with any scale in nature. A nautical mile, on the other hand, is equal in length to one-sixtieth part of the length of a degree of a great circle of the earth. But the circumference of the earth is nowhere a true circle; its radius of curvature is variable; hence the nautical mile, as a matter of fact, depends for its length upon the shape as well as the size of the globe sailed over; and hence, strictly speaking, the length of the nautical mile should vary with the latitude, from 6,046 feet at the equator to 6,109 feet at the pole. Such extreme accuracy is not necessary in navigating, and can not be well attained without undue labor. The English Admiralty, therefore, have adopted 6,080 feet as the length of a nautical mile, which corresponds with the length of one-sixtieth of a degree—or one minute of arc—of a great circle in latitude 48 degrees. The United States coast survey has adopted the value of the nautical mile "as equal to one-sixtieth part of the length of a degree on the great circle of a sphere whose surface is equal to the surface of the earth." This gives the length of one nautical mile as equal to 6,080.27 feet, which is very nearly the value of the Admiralty mile adopted in the English navy. Practically the nautical mile is 800 feet longer than the statute mile. In other words, one nautical mile is equal to 1.1515 statute miles or one statute mile is equal to 0.869 nautical mile. Multiply nautical miles by 1.1515 and the product will be statute miles; or, multiply statute miles by 0.869, and the product will be nautical miles. A knot is in length a nautical mile—that is, 6,080 feet. But it never, correctly speaking, means anything more or less than a nautical mile an hour. When saying that a ship has a speed of twenty knots, it means that in one hour of time she can go twenty nautical miles, precisely in the way that a 2:40 horse means that a horse in two minutes and forty seconds of time can trot one mile. Remember, then, that it is erroneous to use knot as synonymous with mile; so, too, it is an error to say so many knots an hour—for the word knots alone signifies the time as well as the rate of progress of the ship during the time. Another point to bear in mind is that though the measure at sea is called, like the measure of distance on land, a mile, like distances at sea are always measured in nautical miles, never in statute miles; and in both cases the single word mile is significant enough to convey the intended meaning. To say that the distance from New York to Southampton is 3,000 sea or nautical miles is tautological, but it would be worse still to say, as many often do, that the distance is 3,000 knots.—Harper's Round Table.

Reduced Rates for Holidays.

On Dec. 24, 25 and 31, 1897, and Jan. 1, 1898, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. will sell reduced rate excursion tickets between all points on its line, and and also to points on some of its immediate connections, good returning until January 4, 1898. Ask ticket agents.

An Efficient Salesman.

Imagine a clerk trying to sell an article to his own "boss" and actually accomplishing it, and winning an increase of salary as a reward! That is what happened recently in one of the branch stores of Lipton, the great English grocer and provision dealer. He has so many clerks that some of them do not know him by sight. It was one of these latter who called Mr. Lipton's attention to a fine specimen of poultry as he was walking through one of his stores, and the clerk was so earnest and adroit in explaining his wares that finally the customer ordered it sent to his residence. When the address was given the energetic clerk, and he found that he had been pressing the goods upon his own employer, he nearly had a fit, but soon recovered upon being informed that his assiduity had earned him an increase of pay.—Merchants' Review.

1898 CALENDARS.

A very handsome calendar for 1898, made to represent a Government mail pouch, has been issued by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry. It is printed in a rich brown and gold on heavy enameled card, size 8x15 inches. The calendar will be sent free anywhere, on receipt of eight cents in postage to A. J. Smith, G. P. & T. A., Cleveland, O.

Cant.

Cant, meaning mock humility, took its name from the Rev. Andrew Cant, a minister in Aberdeenshire, who, during the time of the Covenanters, was famed for his whining and pretending fervor.

James Nasmyth.

James Nasmyth, of Edinburgh, the inventor of the steam hammer, was a man of extraordinary energy and genius; and being ambidextrous, he was able to draw or sketch or handle a hammer or chisel with either hand. The laboratory or workshop in his own home he called "Fireside." Even though sitting in church, when a new idea came across his brain he rose and walked off to his workshop, and made a drawing, or, in order to preserve it in form, he would either forge it in iron or make a wooden pattern.

Making a Machine Bow.

A droll inventor has just made a machine my means of which a man can lift his hat by merely contracting his brows, so that in case he meets a lady friend he can make an automatic bow. Not only has the inventor spent a good deal of time on his device, but he actually has had it patented. For a society man who has a great many friends it would certainly be a very good thing. He and the armless man could use it to great advantage.

Specific Advertising.

The Taneytown (Md.) Record thinks that advertising should represent the current news of the day in the store. "A single piece of dress goods of some new design or specially low price will serve better for the subject of an advertisement than a catalogue of goods." Many successful advertisers concur in this philosophy; many more practice it without bothering over the philosophy.

Relic of Chamberlain.

In view of the early completion of his twenty-eighth year in public life, some one has dug up a relic of the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's first election to office. It is the appeal for signatures to a requisition asking him to stand for member of the Birmingham Town Council in 1869. The paper says that "there can be no doubt that Mr. Chamberlain is eminently fitted to represent the ward. He is a large ratepayer, a man of thorough business habits, enlarged views and marked ability, belonging, indeed, to precisely the class of burgesses most desirable on the Town Council.

A Gigantic English Brewery.

Some three thousand people are employed at Bass's Burton breweries and the number of clerks employed is nearly three hundred. The breweries cover about two hundred acres of land. The annual output is about 1,300,000 barrels, and the annual issue of bottling labels with the red pyramid on them is about 230,000,000. Moreover no less than 80,000 acres are employed in growing hops for the manufacture of Bass's ale.

Roundabout Communication.

At the time of the great blizzard of 1888, from which New Yorkers still date events, that city had but a single, slender cord of connection with the outside world, telegraphic communication being cut off in every direction except one. The Commercial cable, which crosses the East river on the Brooklyn bridge, runs underground to Sheepshead bay, crosses the bay and then plunges into the ocean's surf along with the bathers at Manhattan beach. This cable is unaffected by land storms. Boston was nearly as bad off as New York and the newspapers of the two cities made frantic efforts to get word from the rest of the country. At last a New York newspaper hit upon the plan of cabling to Boston by way of London. A message was therefore sent by the Commercial line to London and forwarded by the other cable of the same company to Cape Ann, where this cable lands, thirty miles from Boston. Fortunately there was a wire between Cape Ann and Boston that had not succumbed to the weight of snow and ice with which it was laden, and through it Boston got news to New York and New York to Boston, though neither of them could get anything from any other part of the United States.—Exchange.

HAZING AT HARVARD.

Pranks That Were Played Upon the Freshmen in the 70's.

Hazing, so far as I know personally, was rather mortifying to one's self-esteem than painful, says a writer in Scribner's. I think I had to recite "Mary had a little lamb" in my nightgown, with a pitcher in my hand, to a group of appreciative sophomores, who were smoking to a man as hard as they could. A few of my classmates had pails of cold water poured over them in bed, but I was little, and perhaps that saved me. Smoking out a freshman with tobacco smoke was a favorite device, and we were all liable to be called on at any time to treat to cigars either at our rooms or at Hubbard's, the apothecary. A freshman, instead of being a gentleman and a scholar, as at present, was regarded as the scum of the earth, without property rights. The following letter was sent by a sophomore of my class to a freshman. The '74 man had it printed and circulated: "Dear Sir:—I speak for the sophomore class when I say that you need have no fear of further roughing if you are willing to follow the example of your classmates and the custom of the college in the matter of treating and are willing to promise to give up the use of a cane for the remainder of the term. If you choose to come with me to Hubbard's and get six cigars, I will give them to the members of the class and see that your algebra is returned. I am disinterested in saying this, as I do not smoke. You had better consider this proposition, as the class are much provoked at your obstinacy, and will not be very careful in what they say or do otherwise. If you will call at 6 Grays at any time within two or three days I will represent the class. Yours, etc." This was signed with the real name of the writer, and he added, in large letters, "Sic Semper Stultibus," a lapse in Latin which was the occasion of some merriment and wounded our class pride.

A Costly Orchid.

One of the most beautiful orchids was recently exhibited in London. It was a white flower, shaped like a seagull with outspread wings, and a gold and vermillion heart. It came from Venezuela, and cost $3,000.

THE CONDUCTOR'S HANDS.

"Filthy Lucre" Keeps Their Fingers and Palms Hopelessly Stained.

Persons who have noticed how greatly in need of being laved the hands of cable-car conductors invariably are have possibly rushed to unjust and unsharitable conclusions, says the New York Post. Those begrimed palms tinged with yellowish green are a decisive demonstration that money is indeed "filthy lucre."

"It don't do no good to wash 'em," said one of the conductors to whom the matter had been as delicately broached as possible. "In the first place, you couldn't get 'em real clean if you tried, after they've got stained in with all them coppers and nickels and dirty silver and bills. It is a caution how that greenish stuff do go through your hands and stick to 'em. Talk about hot water and scrubbing brush and soap—they can't budge it. You can take the skin off, but there's that coppery color all the same. I don't expect ever to get my hands clean ag'in—'specially my right one. When I first come on the road I washed my hands at the end of every run, but before I'd finish half the trip back they'd be as black and yellow and green as they had been before. I didn't get no credit for having washed 'em; it didn't do no good; it was a lot of bother, and so I give it up. I see people looking at my hand when I hold it out for fare, as if they was cogitatin' where I come from, and delicate folks—'specially ladies—fairly shrinks, and is so afraid of touching my palms that they drops their contributions from a lofty distance, and sometimes onto the floor. Then they expect me to pick the money up. I can't help wondering if they're Christian folk and if they ain't sensible enough to see that it ain't my fault that my hands is so unpresentable. But they don't—they seem to condemn me from the word go, and never imagine that I might keep my hands as clean as theirs if I only had the chance.

"Nobody knows how dirty money is until he takes it on a car. I guess the coppers is about the worst. Most of the stain comes from them, but the silver helps along powerful, and the bills, too. Some of the dollar bills I have to take is horrible, for all they ain't been out so long; they fairly reek; you could use 'em 'stead of graphite to grease up your bicycle chain. Then the nickels and silver—they's about as bad. I don't know how they get so much dirt on 'em. If you ain't handling small money all the time—runnin' your fingers through it constant—you might not find it's so filthy; but just be a conductor on this road for a week and see if you don't almost have a turn of the stomach ag'in' money. Seems to me sometimes as if I'd like to go where there ain't no money. This ain't no business for a genuine American and I ain't in it for keeps, you bet I ain't. Soon's something decenter turns up, I take it, and I hope my hands'll bleach out some time."

CARRYING THE UMBRELLA.

Conclusive Opinions Formed by Your Fashion of Doing It.

Two men who sat near the window of a hotel in a great city a few days ago whiled away the time by watching the women go by and commenting on their umbrellas.

The storm had abated about an hour before, and the sun had peered through a rift in the clouds, but, for all that, the first pedestrian went stalking past with her umbrella still held aloft.

"That women," said one of the men, "is as patient as Job. She is not a student absent-mindedly poring over book lore, but a housekeeper, who is so taken up with thoughts of what she is going to get for supper that she doesn't know it has stopped raining. What is more, she is thoroughly unselfish. People who forget to lower their umbrellas when the sun begins to shine always are. That girl just behind her, who has already taken time to fold her umbrella neatly, even though it is soaking wet, is going to be an old maid. She is narrow-minded, too. The next one has bound the folds down, but it looks uneven and bulgy. That woman's children will always look dowdy, but she will nurse them successfully through innumerable attacks of croup and rash, and no family in town will have better things to eat. That short woman, with her umbrella flopping this way and that, will always be poor, because she will give away everything as soon as she gets it. Her's isn't altogether a commendable generosity, either, for it is caused more by lack of power to say 'no' than by an inherent desire to help her fellow-creatures. That dark woman with the tip of her umbrella trailing downward and backward at an angle of 45 degrees is malicious. I wouldn't trust her out of my sight. She'd say something mean about me the first chance she got. The one who carries her umbrella swung carelessly over her shoulder is a happy-go-lucky individual, who will always have a good time, not because she earns it, but because the world owes it to her, and she is going to have her rights."

Oddest Tombstone in the World.

At the entrance of the Church of San Salvador, in the city of Oviedo, Spain, is a remarkable tomb erected by a Prince named Silo, with a curious Latin inscription, which may be read 270 ways by beginning with the capital S in the center:

HISTORIC QUEBEC.

Parts of It Suggestive of Scenes in the Old World.

From Quebec a correspondent writes to the Paris Messenger: "Ici on parle francais" might be written on the portals of this quaint and picturesque old city. Strolling in lower Quebec, you might easily fancy yourself in Amiens or Dieppe. In the upper town there is more English, but everywhere an amusing mixture. On the same card you will read "Maison a louer," "House to let;" on one side of the door "Pas d'admission sans affaires" and on the other "No admittance except on business." This bilingual necessity causes a little extra painting and printing. Each railway crossing must be marked likewise, "Traverse du chemin de fer" and every official "notice" must be printed also in full as an "Avis." The blending is often curious, as when two adjoining shops have their announcements one in French and the other in English. Along the Grande Alle, running right across the Plains of Abraham, you might be in Brussels or Paris, only that Clifton terrace seems to recall you to Kensington. American travelers for whom Europe is too distant are advised to go to Quebec, there to find a bit of the mediaeval old world transplanted to the new, but still embalmed in its ancient religious sentimentalism, upon which the rush and roar of modern unrest produce as little effect as the Atlantic breakers on the cliffs of Cape Breton. French continues uppermost until you pass Montreal, but from Ottawa and Kingston to the Pacific the legend of the nearly universal tongue is like that of the Paris shopkeepers, who announced "English and American spoken." In most of the best schools English is taught and a large number of the people are conversant with both languages, English being indispensable for commerce.

APPENDICITIS.

No Medical Cure, Although Some People Recover.

The position is taken by Dr. McBurney, in the London Medical News, that there is really no medical cure for appendicitis, even though some cases recover without operation. He considers, too, though appendicitis is a surgical disease, yet operation may not be necessary in every case, the fact being that this ailment is a stoppage of the drainage from the appendix to the colon, and preliminary treatment is often worse than useless. Thus, the opium treatment relieves pain and discomfort, but entirely masks the symptoms at a most important time, for it is in the first twenty-four hours from the beginning of the attack that physicians can decide not only as to the diagnosis, but as to the result and cause, probably, of the case. If, for instance, there is no increase in urgency in five or six hours, the patient is not in immediate danger if kept at perfect rest in bed; on the other hand, if in twelve hours there is still no increase in the severity of the symptoms, the patient should begin to improve. But if the urgency of the case has steadily increased in twelve hours from the time when the diagnosis was made, an operation will probably be called for. After two attacks a patient is sure to have a third, and each attack renders operation more difficult and dangerous; all the advantages lie in the operation between the attacks, and in an operation during an acute attack the prognosis is worse.

A Feathered Surgeon.

A story is told which would indicate that swallows have considerable surgical skill as well as intelligence. A certain physician found in a nest a young swallow much weaker than its mate, which had one of its legs bandaged with horsehairs. Taking the hairs away, he found that the bird's leg was broken. The next time he visited the nest he found the leg again bandaged. He continued to observe "the case," and in two weeks found that the bird was cautiously removing the hairs, a few each day. The cure was entirely successful.

MONTHLY SUFFERING.

Thousands of women are troubled at monthly intervals with pains in the head, back, breasts, shoulders, sides hips and limbs. But they need not suffer.

These pains are symptoms of dangerous derangements that can be corrected. The menstrual function should operate painlessly.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

makes menstruation painless, and regular. It puts the delicate menstrual organs in condition to do their work properly. And that stops all this pain. Why will any woman suffer month after month when Wine of Cardui will relieve her? It costs $1.00 at the drug store. Why don't you get a bottle to-day?

For advice, in cases requiring special directions, address, giving symptoms, "The Ladies' Advisory Department," The Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mrs. ROZENA LEWIS, of Gonzalez, Texas, says: "I was troubled at monthly intervals with terrible pains in my head and back, but have been entirely relieved by Wine of Cardui."

—The Goshen Democrat says: "It is surprising how a man will change his mind after being elected to office. The salary looks large to him until he begins to receive it and then it becomes small and unsatisfactory and he at once begins to grab everything in sight. Political parties cannot correct the errors of nature, but they can make salary grabbing unpopular.

—Steuben Republican:—The are some smart pupils in the Waterloo schools. One of them says a canal is a "ditch running through a large body of water." Another says "Congress is where the winds meet," and a third says the hyphen in the compound word "hen-coop" was "for the old hen to roost on." No wonder the editor of the Press thinks there is too much attractions from the books, and too many are seeking more earnestly for a good time than a good grade."

—County Supt. Coe indulged in a runaway when about four miles from Butler yesterday. He drove up beside an old shed and left his horse stand and he started into the school house. He had scarcely turned around till the horse started. The sleigh was dumped in the fence corner and the horse ran about a mile farther and came to a stop in a tamarack swamp. The horse was hurt but little. but the sleigh was almost a wreck. However, by borrowing a pair of thills he managed to get home.

—John Whittington, after a good visit with his old friends here, started back last evening for his home at Des Moines, Iowa.

—Laporte Argus:—Young Sutherlin, who was recently returned to Marshall county from the northern prison for a life sentence for murder committed in Starke county, has an excellent prospect of going free this time, for the Starke county commissioners have petitioned Judge Capron, of Plymouth, not to appoint any extra attorneys or make any more costs in the case, as the first cost Starke $2,500, and a second conviction is not worth the expenditure.

DID YOU EVER?

Get Left? Is The Question H. C. Shull is Asked.

If anything tickles Hank Shull more than a joke on someone else, it is a joke on himself. Last evening he went out to C. C. Buss' north of town to get some milk he needed, as he had run short. After getting a 6-gallon can filled he started home. When he got to Eph Raub's he remembered that Mr. R's daugbter Maud, was married that evening to John Anthony. So, he visit with him a little before he left on his wedding trip, he stopped in, leaving his horse in the yard near by. It was a pleasant group that welcomed him and he joined in with the conversation in his usual jolly way, and soon was in the lead telling stories and enjoying them. At length, the lateness of the hour admonished him he ought to start home. But on bidding the jovial group good night, he went out into the dark only to find his horse was gone. After looking about some, he concluded it had got tired of staying in the cold and gone home. So he started on afoot, and in due time reached his home, but found no horse waiting for him. Now we go back to the Raub homestead. Soon after Mr. Shull left, Mr. Raub went to the barn as usual to see everything in shape before going to bed. And there on the warm side of the barn was Shull's horse, wagon and milk. Some of the young people had gone out early in the evening and led it there. So Mr. Raub jumped in and drove the rig to town, and Mr. Shull much to his relief had his own again. When he realized what happened, he may have "affirmed" a few times, but he never swears. But he laughed a good, strong healthy laugh, it last, and now when anyone asks him the leading question at the head of this article, he pleads guilty. It may have also been a sort of joke on Mr. Raub, for it was 2 o'clock at night when he reached his own home after doing this good natured turn for his old friend.

A NOVEL BANK.

(Laparte Argus.)

There is a funny little bank at Walkerton, in the huckleberry marshes, sixteen miles south of here on the Lake Erie & Western Road. The concern was formerly conducted by local capitalists, who found the business unprofitable and sold out to Chicago parties. The latter had little money, but made a great stagger at banking, just the same. The community distrusted the bank and commenced pulling its money out and the funds ran so low that the bankers hurried off to Chicago and Indianapolis for cash, the exigency obliging one of them to hire a special train to travel from Peru to Walkerton with currency "to save the bank." Only a small amount was raised and the calls of the depositors grew more frequent and urgent. Finally the "bankers" told their customers that they were out of funds, and could pay nothing at that time, but were sound as a dollar and would pay every penny. The "bank" is opened each morning, and each morning the depositors drift in and present their checks, which are politely declined, the refusal to shell out being accompanied with a sunny smile and a promise to liquidate later. At first the depositors took the situation calmly, but the joke has proceeded far enough, and unless the cash is soon forthcoming, there will be a hot time in Walkerton.

Indiana may justly lay claim to the possession of the only bank in the country which refuses to pay its depositors and yet keeps its doors wide open and continues to delude its patrons.

WEST IN TRIM.

And Will Wrestle For The State Championship Tomorrow Night.

(Fort Wayne News.)

Henry West, who is to wrestle with Champion Hale next Thursday evening is putting in many hours a day at the rooms of the Athletic club. A News reporter took a look at West today. He is evidently in prime physical condition and fit to make the fight of his life. "I am in first-class shape," said West. "I have spared no pains to get fitted for this match, and I think I am in better shape than I have ever been." Director Loveless is one of the most skillful wrestlers on the mat in the west, and he has given West some first-class work in the last few days. West evidently considers this a turning point in his career, and will make a desperate effort to bring Hale down,

John Dieter, of Shelbyville, Ind., when Thomas A. Hendricks was a candidate for Governor of that State bet a coffin that he would be elected. He won the bet, which was paid, and the other day when he died he was buried in a coffin that cost him nothing.

A kind of slave market is said to exist in many country districts of Finland. Once a year such paupers, lunatics and aged people of each parish as cannot support themselves are put up at public auction, and consigned to those families or farmers who will board them at the lowest price offered by the parish authorities.

The tall Lombardy poplar has a reputation in some parts of Europe as a kind of natural lightning conductor. Investigations recently made appear to confirm this reputation of the tree. Its wood is an unusually good conductor of electricity as compared with others, while its great height and lack of spreading branches enable it to conduct a lightning stroke straight downward.

A HARVEST OF HUMAN HAIR.

Millions of Pounds Every Year Get Tangled Up in Commerce.

Perhaps there is no staple article about which less is known by the average person than human hair as an article of commerce. It will doubtless surprise many when it is stated that the dealers in human hair goods do not depend on chance clippings here and there, but that there is a regular hair harvest that can always be relied upon. It is estimated that over 12,000,000 pounds of human hair are used annually in the civilized world for adorning the heads of women. In New York City alone over four tons of this class of goods are imported yearly.

"Not a little of the hair used in this country," said a New York dealer to the writer, "comes from the heads of American women and is fully as fine in shade and texture as the imported article. We had a big harvest during the craze that the fair sex had not long ago for having their hair cut short. Many thousands of women who then had their locks sheared have since bitterly repented it, as in many instances their hair has grown so slowly that they have been compelled to wear a wig or a switch since the fashion changed. After the majority of women reach the age of 30 the hair seems to partially lose its vigor, and if cut it will not grow long again.

"Two-thirds of the ladies nowadays use false hair more or less. The decree of fashion, or the desire to conceal a defect or heighten a charm, is the reason, of course. One woman, for instance, has a high forehead and wishes to reduce it in appearance. Another has worn off the front hair by continued frizzing, and would like to conceal the fact. Both make use of a front or top piece, with a choice of many styles.

"Ladies' wigs cost from $20 to $200. Half wigs, top pieces and switches, from $10 to $50, according to quality.

"The largest supply of hair comes from Switzerland, Germany, and the French provinces. There is a human hair market in Merlans, in the department of the lower Pyrenees, held every Friday. Hundreds of hair traders walk up and down the one street of the village, their shears dangling from their belts, and inspect the braids which the peasant girls, standing on the steps of the houses, let down for inspection. If a bargain is struck the hair is cut, and the money paid on the spot, the price varying from 60 cents to $5 in our money.

"A woman's hair may grow to the length of six feet. And I know a lady who has been offered and refused $500 for her crown of glory, which is over six feet long. A single female hair will bear up a weight of four ounces without breaking, but the hair thus heavily weighted must be dark-brown, for blonde hair breaks under a strain of two and one-half ounces. There are some 2,000 importers, manufacturers and dealers in human hair in the United States."—Washington Star.

HE PUT OUT THE FLASH.

The Good Clergyman Had Scruples Against Killing Anyone.

That the patriotic clergy of New England did a great deal, both by precept and example, to foster and sustain the spirit of independence during the time of the American revolution is shown by the various documents relating to that period of her history. Headley, in his "Chaplains and Clergy in the Revolution," gives some interesting anecdotes of the preaching soldiers of that stirring time, men who laid down their Bibles and hymnbooks to carry the sword and musket in defense of liberty and justice.

The Rev. Thomas Allen, the first minister ever settled in the town of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, was a man renowned and beloved for his gentleness and piety. When hostilities between England and the colonies were declared, Pastor Allen's flock was astonished to hear their mild shepherd announce his intention to join the militia and fight for the right!

At the battle of Bennington the Berkshire militia had their share in the conflict, and the Rev. Thomas Allen fought as a common soldier, side by side with his fellow-countrymen. Knowing this good man's natural aversion to violence and bloodshed, some one said to him after the battle was over:

"They say you fought at Bennington, Mr. Allen. Is it true?"

"Yes; I did," answered the man of God. "It was a hot, close battle, and it became every patriot to do his duty."

"Well, but, Mr. Allen," said the parishioner, "did you kill anybody?"

"No," replied the courageous but conscientious clergyman; "I don't know that I killed anybody; but I happened to notice a frequent flash from behind a certain bush, and every time I saw that flash one of our men fell. I took aim at the bush and fired. I don't know that I killed anybody, but I put out that flash!"

Are Athletes Healthy?

A question which has been lately much discussed, namely, "Are athletes healthy?" is one of considerable importance. The key to the answer lies in the fact that health depends on the integrity of the digestive and assimilating organs, and that perfection of muscle is quite a secondary consideration. Many perfectly healthy men are certainly anything but muscular, while many laborers who do an amount of muscular work which, measured in foot-pounds per day, would astonish some of our cricketers, are far from healthy; and, in fact, the same is true of many athletes themselves. In the discussions which have taken place the athlete is defined as the "trained" man. But this training aims merely at developing the muscular strength often at the expense of serious strain of the more important organs. The natural athlete, the one whose muscular power reaches its maximum with the minimum of training, may suffer but little from the process; but in proportion as a man has to train hard, to restrict his natural appetite, and to undergo severe toil before he can get his muscles into order, so does the probability of injury increase. It is not, however, in what one may call the dietetic training, but in the violent and prolonged muscular efforts which modern athleticism demands of its victims, that danger to health arises. The wear and tear of the muscular system is considerable—that every one acknowledges and expects; but the wear and tear of the nervous system is far greater than is at all generally recognized, while the strain of the vascular system is very great indeed. The athlete is often healthy, but this is in spite of rather than by virtue of his athleticism.—British Medical Journal.

Politeness Sent Him to Jail.

It was dusk in Jackson Park. Only a half-light filtered through the trees, and the hue of the grass had changed nearly to black. A whirring insect was filing his claws or brushing his teeth or doing something to himself on a limb overhead, and from the long lagoon a frog piped now and then.

A well-dressed man, young and comely, sat on one of the benches with his legs stretched in front of him and his hands thrust into his pockets. His hat was pulled down over his eyes and he chewed an unlighted cigar.

A small man, dressed as a sailor, passed him slowly. A narrow belt was about his hips and his rough hat was pushed back from a brown face. He had the rolling walk and loosely curved fingers of the tar. As he passed he glanced indifferently at the man on the bench. He walked on a few steps, stopped and pulled a common pipe from his pocket. This he stuffed with tobacco and, going back, said to the man on the bench:

"Got a match?"

The man on the bench glanced up impatiently and produced a gold match safe. The little flame flared up, illuminating both faces. The sailor man stooped over the other, said something in a low voice and the sharp click of handcuffs sounded on the still air. The two men walked to a car and boarded it. The well-dressed man was a forger and he was wanted in Cincinnati.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Zebras as Draught Animals.

The Prefect of Police in Paris has recently issued an order replacing the zebra on the list of draught animals allowed to be used in Paris, says an exchange. For some years the zebra has been permitted in the streets of London, where there is a famous carriage drawn by a team of four zebras, and used by one of the financial magnates of the city. According to "Figaro," the zebra by no means deserves his bad reputation as a restive and intractable beast; it is only necessary to begin his training early enough to make him a model of gentleness and docility.

CHANGE IN WOMAN'S ATTIRE.

To the delight of artists and other lovers of nature the growing tendency in woman's attire is to allow the female form to assume more and more the lines of nature. The inartistic effects in woman's fashions which gave the figure unnatural proportions are being gradually eliminated, and looseness, flowing lines and gentle curves are the order in new gowns. This interests not only the women and the modistes who made their gowns, but men who have for years jeered at and ridiculed, secretly perhaps in many cases, the absurdities of woman's fashions, tight corsets, wasplike waists, bulging hips and other abominations. Women have for years gone on imagining that they were making themselves beautiful by just these means and getting farther and farther away from nature and her lines. The climax was reached ten years ago, with the bustle and the hump it produced, and since then there has been a gradual return to natural lines until now the new fashions are almost ideal.

More women are now well rounded and proportioned, and it is attributable to nothing save the spread of the athletic fever among women and the consequent abolition of the tight corset and tight gowns. The American public had become accustomed to the deformities which the prevailing styles seemed to inflict upon women, but they were none the less inartistic and objectionable. The new fashion, being on the lines of a return to natural lines, is indeed welcome and a marked improvement.

She Uses Her Light.

A man said to me not long ago, "What has got into the girls? Has it become the fashion to economize? All the nicest girls I know are talking of the value of money and how much is wasted unthinkingly. Are we poor bachelors to take courage and believe that we can afford one of these beautiful luxuries in wives?"

Alas! It is anything but a hint to take courage, for this heavenly phase of the new woman means that when she has learned that she can support herself, so that in case her riches take wings she need not be forced to drudge at uncongenial employment, or to marry for a home—it means that she will be more particular than ever in the kind of a man she marries. For in fitting herself for marriage she is learning quite as well the kind of husband she ought to have. And she will not be as apt to marry a man on account of his clothes, or because he dances divinely, as once she might have done.

I do not mean to say that the new woman will not marry. In point of fact she will, if properly urged by the right man. But she will not marry so early, so hurriedly nor so ill-advisedly as before. And therefore the men whom new women marry will do well to realize the compliment of her choice, for it will mean that, according to her light, he has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting. Of course, the other women marry on that principle, too. The only difference between the new woman and her sisters is in the amount of her light and the use she makes of it.—Woman's Home Companion.

A Modern Diana.

Mrs. Eugene Belden, a resident of the Boston suburbs, has proved that a woman can point a gun straight and bag large game. During the past two seasons she has killed in the Maine woods as many deer as the law will allow. Her husband is an enthusiastic sportsman. Some time ago he persuaded her to try shooting bottles thrown in the air. She was successful in breaking most of them and was soon eager to try her skill at something with more risk and excitement about it. She always dresses so that she can get about just as easily and noiselessly as a man. Her costume consists of corduroy knickerbockers and cap, a heavy sweater and high boots. The first year that Mrs. Belden was in the woods she stood in the runways and waited for the guides to scare up the game, but afterward she exchanged this somewhat tiresome method for the fascination of the still hunt.

MRS. BELDEN.

College Women as Wives.

Women of a higher education bring to motherhood and wifehood a better preparation than do those of smaller opportunities. The reasons for this are both physical and mental. They are, as a rule, older, physically mature, and the opinion is held by some physicians that, for the sake of the physical perfection of the race, no woman should marry until she is 25. They have a wider knowledge of physiological and psychological laws—or they have the ability to acquire it—which must bring forth beneficial fruit in the rearing of their children. They know more profoundly the responsibilities of motherhood, and their realization of the importance of details in the training of a child disposes them to look upon what might seem drudgery to other women as glorified, educational opportunity. Besides, when an educated woman is mated with an educated man there is intellectual companionship between them and each has sufficient respect for the other's mental and moral sanity to make possible a government for the home and the children, not by "managing" each other, keeping clear of a pandering to each other's foibles and prejudices, but by frank and fearless discussion as to what is reasonable and right.

Golf as a Mind Cure.

"My friends all laugh at my enthusiasm for golf," said a married woman with a large family and many cares, "but if they could realize what it has done for me they would not wonder at my 'infatuation,' as they call it. Many a time, when I have been so worried over this thing and that I would otherwise have sat down and cried, I have forgotten for the time being my cares and my troubles in following that little white ball across the fields, and the attention it naturally commands makes me forget for the time my cares and my troubles, while the fresh winds of heaven blow away the cobwebs from my tired brain, giving me courage and a cleaner vision. I verily believe, if it had not been my liking for golf and my enjoyment of the game, I should have had nervous prostration."

Entirely Too Formal.

Dolly Swift—Young Mr. Pensmith, the editor of the Weekly Visitor, has just made me a written offer of marriage.

Sally Gay—He is a handsome fellow. What will be your answer, dear?

Dolly Swift—He is handsome, I'll admit, but I shall be forced to decline him with thanks. He is too horridly business-like. After requesting an early answer, he added: "Please write briefly, to the point and upon but one side of the paper. Sign your full name, not for publication, but merely as a guarantee of good faith, and do not forget to inclose a postage stamp if you desire a reply." Sally, a man like that would calmly smoke while the baby fell downstairs.

Kittens' Heads for Bonnets.

Cute little kittens with small, dainty heads, will soon be in great demand if a fad lately introduced continues to grow. An enterprising milliner, anxious to appease the numerous Audubon societies, decorated several bonnets with kittens' heads in lieu of birds and the innovation was a decided success. Already she has received more orders than she can fill, and her agents are scouring the town for suitable kittens. Black and maltese, though occasionally a white head, is used on a dark velvet bonnet. Kittens are more artistic than owls and the milliner defends her practice as much less barbarous than the use of birds, for the decapitation of cats will save many a hapless feline the miseries inflicted by malicious youngsters.—Chicago Chronicle.

Drove an Express Wagon.

For five weeks Clara Priddy, aged 20, living near New Castle, Ind., conducted her father's express business. Priddy operates a stage line from Cadiz to New Castle, carrying the mail, merchandise and passengers. This business was his only means of livelihood. He was taken ill with typhoid fever. No one could be got to take his place. His daughter Cora, however, resolved to take charge of the business, and she did, driving to New Castle each morning in all kinds of weather, assisting in loading heavy cargoes of merchandise and caring for her team.

And He Didn't.

She—So many men marry for money—you wouldn't marry me for money, would you, dearest?

He (absently)—No, darling, I would not marry you for all the money in the world.

And he marvels now that she did not speak the last time he met her.

OF OUTER GARMENTS.

THE ADVISABILITY OF CLOAKS, CAPES OR BLOUSES.

All Three Are in Evidence Among the Fashionables and You May Wear the One that Best Becomes Your Figure and Circumstances.

Fashions for Feminines.

New York correspondence:

BENEATH her lovely opera cloak a woman may have almost any sort of a skirt and waist, but an opera cloak to the heels made of rich material and set off handsomely with a fur cape, a high collar for you to nestle your head and throat in, and lined either with fur or with a rich silk of contrasting color, will be a very expensive garment. Yet it will last a season or so and will save quite a penny in gowns. Pearl gray with chinchilla for the fur is the favorite combination just now. The one sketched here was pearl gray satin lined with rose pink. The fur collar was lined with the same shade and could be worn separately as a collarette, and fur edging of the wrap's fronts being alone fixed.

All questions of cost aside, there are many reasons for preferring a cape to a long, loose cloak, handsome and rich as the latter is. The short cape has a more wholesome, healthy look. Such a garment, we argue, makes quite as good a background when slipped back as does the long cloak, and it is a deal more dainty before it is slipped off. To be sure, the young matron with a lovely figure to consider may prefer a down-to-the-heels redingote, richly trimmed with fur and with big sleeves and armholes, to either the long, loose opera cloak or the short, saucy cape. Such a redingote is eminently becoming, and you can spend all the money you can get out of him on it. He would need to be easily approachable to have provided the one the artist pictures, for it was made of purple mirror velvet trimmed with black silk braid and white Thibet fur.

Fine as this looked and sounds, the redingote really is not as generally useful as either the long, loose cloak or the little cape. For one thing, the tight fitting garment is not as gracefully slipped off as are the other two styles, and then so far as appearances go the accompanying large picture is a strong argument in favor of the more perky cape. These have altered little from the models first offered several years ago, except that, as a rule, a single cape suffices, and that the layer style in vogue a few seasons ago is voted lamp-shady. The collar is a feature of all. It must come very high and softly about the face, and the fitting and shaping done in fur is simply wonderful.

Coming to details of the three shown herewith, there is in the picture diagonally opposite to the redingote already described an exquisite cape of dull gray peau de soie. It was finished with mouffion, and bow knots and wavy ends of silver ribbon were appliqued on it. This appliquing of bow knots is much done this season, is very effective, and is very easily accomplished by any. Stitching has been used as a finish to the edges of garments in close run rows, as on the edges of the wheel skirt, but only lately has stitching in wonderful swirls been practiced. It results charmingly, giving stiffness and body to the garment and when taffeta thread is used, introducing a glint of color. In this model gilt thread stitched white satin, feather trimming appearing at all edges and giving the collar. Above these two is a bright red cloth cape, trimmed with mink and appliqued with black silk. Capes that like this are cut into a drooping point in front are not quite as full as they were, but they set out well from the shoulder. The dressiest, though of course not the coslest of them, expose the arm to almost the elbow.

BLOUSES IN ALL BUT LOOSENESS.

It is lovely to be all a-fluff in full dress rig, but she is a foolish woman who neglects her street jacket for the sake of her opera cape. For young girls nothing is prettier than the close back, shield front jacket. Two of these are shown in the third picture. These jackets are cut rather longer on the hips than other jackets are, and are made of any heavy kersey material, must have a high collar topped by a flaring finish at back and sides, and may or may not be fur-lined. Braiding is usual, and many pretty effects suggesting the curves of the figure are secured by fancy braiding along the side seams. Such jackets do not usually match the rest of the costume, and therefore they are of very general use.

The blouse jacket is more in favor with the older sister, or the girl a little more exactly up to stylish date. It is very short on the hips, and many models fit the figure to the belt with entire precision, with no trace of blouse. The shield front is adapted with entire success to the blouse, and revers of fur are set on others quite as if the jacket were of the more conventional type. But the belt and the short flaring skirts below it rate the garment as a blouse beyond question. Of the two presented here, that in which the shield front was counterfeited was dark red cloth trimmed with black braid. A bit of fur came at the wrists. Cuffs, revers and collar of the other jacket were seal, its material being dark gray broadcloth finished with tucking.

BIRDS OF VERY FINE FEATHERS.

JAUNTY SCHOOL COATS.

A Golden Floor.

King George II. was once invited out to dine with a wealthy and eccentric old duke, who possessed more money than he very well knew what to do with. Upon this occasion, wishing to impress his majesty with the immensity of his riches, he had the floor of the dining hall paved from end to end with sovereigns, the head being up. Each coin was stuck in a mixture of lime, which soon dried, leaving the precious "tile" securely fastened. When the king arrived, and was shown what had been done in his honor, his amazement knew no bounds, and it was with difficulty he could be persuaded to set foot upon the golden floor.—Bristol Observer.

In Want of False Teeth.

An itinerant musician applied to the Midway guardians at Chatham on Saturday for a set of false teeth, as having lost his own, he was unable to blow the cornet. One of the guardians sympathized with him, and urged his colleagues to comply, as they had already provided tooth brushes, tooth powder and glass eyes for workhouse inmates. The board, however, declined the invitation.—Lloyd's London Weekly.

Artificial Eyelashes.

The Parisians are credited with having found out how to make false eyelashes. They draw a fine needle threaded with dark hair through the skin of the eyelid, forming long loops, and after the process is over—it is said to be a painless one—a splendid dark fringe veils the wearer's eyes.

CASTE IN INDIA.

A Member of the Pariahs Has No Chance for Rising.

"In India all save the lowest caste, what we call pariahs, can rise in the world, as we Western folk count rising. They can become as rich as they like; they can enter Government service, become merchants, lawyers, anything they please. But caste is a religious and social distinction, which is self-supporting, self-contained. A Brahman is always a Brahman, even if he be a servant. I remember one case where the rajah of a Hill state always salaamed to the servant of a friend of mine. The servant was of a higher position than the ruler of the land in which he served."

"Then a member of the lowest caste, or pariah, has no chance of rising?"

"None as a Hindoo. If he becomes a Mohammedan—which only requires a repetition of their creed before witnesses—he takes his position among his new coreligionists. Of course, to Hindoos he remains tabu, as all Mohammedans are, even of the highest rank. Theoretically, he would be. But not in marriage. He would find great difficulty in getting a wife of good class, no matter how rich he might be; for money and position count for little in India. The poorest and lowliest intermarry with the highest, if they are of good caste. Of course, caste is essentially Hindoo, but in the Punjab, which is largely Mohammedan, the exclusive feeling of caste extends to the latter. I remember, for instance, a Mohammedan nobleman of the highest rank, enormously wealthy, finding the greatest difficulty in securing a wife in what I may call his class, because his mother had not been of a reputable class. It would not have been so difficult a task in England. Briefly, then, an outcast—though this is a misnomer, since the scavengers or pariahs never belonged to any caste at all—by changing his occupation—that is, ceasing to be a scavenger and touching unclean things—and becoming a Mohammedan, can rise, as we count rising, in the world. But, virtually, he remains the man he was born."

WORKED BY WEIGHTS.

Church Chimes Rung by an Ingeniously Constructed Apparatus.

Few people who admire the musical peal of the bells from some old country church can realize how much labor is expended to produce the rhythm they admire.

When church chimes are rung by hand it needs the labor of two or three men for several hours daily to work the windlasses. It is quite time that ingenuity should have set to work to arrange an apparatus by which the chimes can be rung with less trouble; and the illustration shows such machinery for the chimes now set up in the tower of St. Germain l'Auxerrois, in Paris. The great saving of work will be realized when it is said that this chime requires only one man to spend ten minutes a week to wind up the weights connected with the automatic part of the chimes.

Old Maids of Olden Times.

What became of the unmarried gentlewoman in the eighteenth century? There were many. Some had money and lived alone, with the brevet rank of mistress. Some had none, and lived for the most part with the eldest brother. Even the thought of working for their livelihood was a degradation unspeakable; in fact, they did work, but it was the household work. Such a woman is described by Grose, writing in 1798. He says:

When I was a young man there existed in the families of most unmarried men or widowers of the rank of gentlemen, residents in the country, a certain antiquated female, either maiden or widow, commonly an aunt or cousin. Her dress I have now before me; it consisted of a stiff-starched cap and hood, a little hoop, a rich silk damask gown, with large flowers. She leant on an ivory-headed crutch-cane, and was followed by a fat, phthisicky dog of the pug kind, who commonly reposed on a cushion and enjoyed the privilege of snarling at the servants, occasionally biting their heels with impunity. By the side of this good old lady jingled a bunch of keys, securing in different closets and corner cupboards, all sorts of cordial waters, cherry and raspberry brandy, washes for the complexion, Daffy's Elixir, a rich seed cake, a number of pots of currant jelly and raspberry jam, with a range of gallipots and phials containing salves, electuaries, jalaps, and purges for the use of the poor neighbors. The daily business of this good lady was to scold the maids, collect eggs, feed the turkeys, and assist at all the interesting events that happened within the parish.

Alice—But the first chapter isn't the one I've read, and the heroine dies! No, you may take it back.

THAT COMMON-LOOKING GIRL.

By Chelsea C. Fraser.

"What a shabby little place!" said Miss Gussie Armstrong, with a toss of her pretty head; "and what a common-looking girl!"

In fact, the daughter of the superintendent of the Lockhammer railroad was not in the best of humor. Ever since leaving Clifton she had sat in her dainty chair in her father's handsomely decorated private car with a supercilious smile upon her otherwise pretty face, and hardly designed to notice the magnificent mountain scenery, so plainly visible through the plate glass window.

The forest-clad knobs and spurs, the rocks, ledges and fissures were nothing to her. She felt no enthusiasm in the triumph of engineering skill over antagonistic nature. The sturdy climb of the engine, pounding and fighting its way up the long ascent, was to her only a wearisome incident of the journey.

After leaving Clifton the grade was level for two miles, and then for the next three miles the iron horse had had an almost continuous struggle with the ascent until it reached Apex—a station scarcely larger, it seemed, than its name.

"What a shabby little place!" repeated Miss Gussie, disapprovingly.

Yes, the weather-beaten station was a shabby little place; but, despite its dingy color and worn-out platform, there was more than a hint of homely comforts within.

Neat curtains hung at the small windows, and on the sill of one of them bloomed a modest geranium in a pudgy jar.

The day was mild and pleasant, and the open door afforded a glimpse of the room within—its floor covered with a cheap carpet and its walls adorned with bright lithographs of railroad advertisements. A shabby little place, truly; but a home, withal.

As the special came to its momentary stand, a quiet, grave-faced man stepped out to make his report to the superintendent.

This was John Orbitt, the stationmaster. The remaining occupants of the home sat side by side on a bench by the door—a small girl and a huge cat—Ruth and Bismarck.

The former gazed at the sumptuous car with undisguised admiration; the latter with calm contemplation.

"What a common-looking girl!"

Miss Gussie need not have spoken so loudly. One great window of the car was open, and little Ruth heard her distinctly.

The child flushed and then placed her brown hand on Bismarck's head, as if to shield her favorite from any chance criticism that might be made.

Paddy Hoolihan, the brakeman, heard the comment and saw the flush, and he muttered a growling protest. It was Paddy who, a year before, had dropped Bismarck—then a frowsy, squalling kitten—into little Ruth's arms, as the train rolled by. And the smile he received in return had amply repaid him for his trouble.

Bismarck, unconscious of the unkind criticism of his best friend, bunted his head up against her hand and purred contentedly.

Paddy smiled at Ruth, and then screwed up his somewhat grimy face in a most horrible grimace at Miss Gussie, which, happily, the latter did not see.

The bell rang, and the special pulled away from the little station.

There was a suspicion of tears in Ruth's eyes. She had known but few little girls, and she and they had met on terms of equality.

John Orbitt had heard the sneer, too.

"Never mind, Ruthie," he said. "Things will be nicer by and by. The superintendent tells me that, as soon as the repair gang can reach us, the station will be fixed up. The roof will be reshingled, the platform replanked and the building painted as blue as the sky. How's that, little one?"

"That will be nice," responded Ruth, her mouth losing its droop.

"I should say so," agreed her father, cheerily. "But, come; Bismarck wants his supper."

And in a short while, ministering to the wants of the cat, Ruth, for the time being, forgot her trouble; but, as the autumn days passed on, she remembered it now and then.

It was a pitifully trivial thing, perhaps, but motherless little Ruth, who so seldom had a companion of her own age, was not like other children and did not forget so easily as many might have done.

The autumn had been a mild one, but winter shut down suddenly and tempestuously. A month passed, and the repair gang would reach Apex in a day or two.

A flat car, loaded with heavy planking for the new platform and shingles for the roof, was sidetracked there one blustering afternoon.

"It will storm before 8 o'clock," predicted Rollins, the freight conductor, who had stepped into the station while the car was being sidetracked.

He had brought a bundle of newspapers that some of the men down at Clifton had saved for Ruth and her father.

"Anything new, Orbitt?"

"Not that I know of, Billy," was the reply. "Who takes the special through to-night?"

"Temple and Dwyer—No. 28, I believe."

This was the same engine and "crew" that had taken the special through a month before, when Miss Gussie Armstrong had been aboard; so, of course, both knew the brakeman would be Paddy Hoolihan.

"There'll be a full safe on board," continued Rollins. "The bridge and track gangs out in the Nettle Range are to be paid. There are several hundred of them, and as the most of them are good for nearly thirty days' pay, it's a big lump. Well, I'd just as soon be taking my old freight through. It never carries anything to tempt anybody. But so long, Orbitt! Good-bye, Ruth. You must let me take you down soon to spend a day with my little girls."

And a moment afterward Rollins had swung himself onto the steps of his caboose and was gone.

The storm that he had prophesied came. It was not the common storm of winter, for the cold was not intense, although it was sufficiently so to make the rain freeze as it fell, spreading the platform with a glassy, slippery coat. Outside the telegraph wires sagged with twice their own weight, and the air was surcharged with electricity, a peculiar but not rare phenomenon in that region, even though the time was winter.

The telegraph instruments on the table before the window clicked in an unusual tone, and occasionally points of blue flame flickered on them and crackled like the breaking of tiny sticks.

There was no thunder. The electricity seemed gathered at no particular spot, but to permeate the whole atmosphere. But the inmates of the station house cared not for this disturbance of the elements—no novelty to them—and the evening was spent in cozy comfort, Mr. Orbitt reading aloud the news in the papers, while Ruth cuddled Bismarck as she listened.

Ten o'clock arrived. The child's regular bedtime had long since passed, but the enjoyment of the reading had kept her awake.

"Better go to bed now, Ruthie," said Mr. Orbitt. "It's getting late. I'll turn in as soon as the special passes. She's due at 11.05."

So Ruth kissed her father, called to Bismarck, and retired to her little room beside the office, leaving the door slightly open to admit the lamplight.

But Bismarck did not follow. He felt comfortable where he was.

Meantime, Ruth went on with her preparations for going to bed. A refractory knot delayed her, and, by the time her shoes were off, there came a clumping of heavy boots on the platform outside. Then the office door was jerked open and two men entered.

"Throw up your hands!" the child heard a hoarse voice demand.

An instant she stood still, possessed with a sickening fear, and then tiptoed to the door and peeped through the crack into the office.

Two roughly dressed men, whose faces were masked with big red handkerchiefs, stood confronting her father, with revolvers leveled at his head.

"Git away from that instrument!" one of them ordered.

Mr. Orbitt's face was white, but he did not flinch before the weapons.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"Git away from that instrument! One thing we don't want is to have you clickin' word down to Clifton. Git back, I say!"

The other intruder grasped the chair in which the stationmaster sat and pulled both out of reach of the instrument. Then, with a few deft turns of a cord, he bound Mr. Orbitt fast to the chair.

"Is the special on time?" asked the first and heavier man.

"Yes," answered Ruth's father, doggedly.

"Will it stop here?"

"If I signal it to do so."

"Well, you needn't take the trouble."

Bismarck had hopped on the table near the robber, to receive the caress that he deemed his due. The man's hand met him with a cuff that sent the cat half way across the room and scuttling into Ruth's apartment.

"What's that?" asked the second intruder, presently, as a slight noise came from the bedroom.

"That blamed cat!" returned his accomplice.

Ruth, pale and frightened, listened beyond the slightly opened door. The special—the creek! She understood their dastardly purpose. Her father's life! It, too, was in danger. What could she do?

Ah, yes! she had a plan—a desperate chance it seemed to her, but still a chance.

Tiptoeing to the window, she softly raised it, set her shoes outside and slipped noiselessly out. Bismarck attempted to follow, but she pushed him back.

The rain was falling steadily, freezing as it fell, but the child scarcely heeded it, as she put on her shoes with trembling fingers and ran swiftly along the switch-track.

Five miles it was to Clifton—five miles down a rock-ballasted roadbed; over more than one open trestle; through a short, black tunnel, and along deep ledges and many jagged fissures.

She could not hope to have run half the distance before the special would have left Clifton, but here before her now loomed up the dark outline of the flat car, loaded with its lumber and shingles. Its presence served as a happy incentive to Ruth's active brain.

She ran to the switch. It was one of the old-fashioned kind, still employed in place of more costly and complicated affairs at little-used side tracks. There were no locks or signals; simply a long bar, which lifted upright.

Exerting all her strength, she strove to lift the bar. It moved heavily and slowly, with much grating of rust and crackling of ice.

Then, when it stood upright, the girl blocked it with the iron pin that was chained to it, and hurried back to the car. A long stick placed in the brake wheel gave her leverage, and, as she loosed it, the car began to move.

Slowly it gained headway, then faster and faster. It rattled as it passed the switch, and she wondered if the scoundrels at the station heard it.

Rapidly the momentum increased. Faster! Around a curve and on down the incline—faster, faster!

Space had been left at the front end of the car where the brake was and here, with the pile of lumber towering above her, Ruth crouched.

She hardly noticed the cold yet, though her garments were icy and her unbound hair soaked and freezing, and her hands numb. The rush of the swaying car made it seem as if the rain was being blown horizontally, and the wind fiercely whipped her sodden dress. But, full of her heroic purpose, she had no time to think of these things.

Would she be in time? She could only pray and hope.

A mile was passed. The car creaked and groaned and toppled frightfully under the strain of its tremendous speed. Roar-r-r! Another trestle. Zum-m-m-m! Through the tunnel, no blacker, seemingly, than the inky night all about. Whiz-z-z! Around a sharp curve! Faster, faster! It seemed as if the car must leave the rails at every turn. The pile of lumber and shingles tottered dangerously.

How far they had gone now Ruth could not tell. The incessant roar, and the lumber toppled as if to plunge overboard. Ruth clung tighter to the brake. The next instant the car whirled around a bend in the opposite direction.

The lumber had not been loaded to withstand such terrible rockings, and the stakes that confined it broke short off, and the whole pile plunged over into the deep gorge, a regular avalanche of boards and shingles.

But the crash was barely audible to little Ruth, clinging to the brake. It almost seemed as if the on-rushing car had outstripped the sound.

And so they dashed on, the car escaping numerous times from apparent destruction in a miraculous manner.

Ruth strained her eyes ahead. At length the car whizzed around another turn, and then struck the level track, and far ahead gleamed a light—it was Clifton station.

Soon the single light grew into separate fragments—the gleam from the depot, the switch signals, and the red and green lanterns on a side-tracked caboose.

The brake! Ruth made a desperate effort to set it. Her strength was not great, but the stress of the situation doubled it and little by little she managed to tighten it. The furious speed of the car moderated every moment.

She brought it to a standstill just in front of the station, though it cost her her last ounce of strength to do so. At the same moment a far-off whistle announced the approach of the special.

Ruth was quickly surrounded by a small group of excited men, and in a few gasps panted out the situation. Then she was carried in to the warm fire, half fainting, while the man with the lantern went charging down the track and the special was saved.

When the special fought its way up the ascent towards Apex, that "common-looking girl" was in the sumptuous parlor car. Miss Gussie, with repentant tears in her eyes, supported her and Paddy Hoolihan and Superintendent Armstrong were standing close by.

Upon reaching Apex Mr. Orbitt was released from the bonds that still confined him to the chair, and the two would-be robbers were captured further up the road, where they were impatiently awaiting the special's arrival.

They were recognized as former employes of the superintendent who had been discharged for grave causes, and had sought to obtain a deadly revenge and a fortune at the same stroke.

On the return little Ruth was the centre of an admiring crowd and Superintendent Armstrong gratefully promised a reward in behalf of the railroad, which made the child's eyes fairly dance.

"And we'll not forget this night's work, either," said Larry Temple, chokingly."

"That we won't!" chimed in the others.

And later, when the promises of all were fulfilled, I verily believe little Ruth more fully appreciated the gift of the toilers than that of the wealthy corporation.

As they went away Paddy Hoolihan lingered behind a moment.

"Ol'll bet he wishes he had a girl like yez, Ruthie!" he whispered.

And Bismarck purred a loud "zum-m-m," as if he quite agreed with him. —Detroit Free Press.

Norway's Quaint Vehicles.

As every tourist is aware, a cariole is a most comfortable little car on two wheels for one passenger. The seat is shaped like a shell and nicely padded, and the traveler goes along with his feet resting in fixed stirrups at the sides, unless he likes to tuck them up in front of him, or dispose of them elsewhere on the framework of the carriage. The driver sits behind on a box, used for stowing away small packages inside and for taking quite a lot outside.

A stolkjaerre is intended for two persons and a driver. It is a rough cart, and again the driver sits behind. Very often these drivers are tiny lads. You may get one about eight in some places when the men are busy at the harvest, and it is usual, when two conveyances are required by the same party, to expect one of the travelers to drive the second conveyance.

As the little yellow ponies know the routes inch by inch, and as it is the custom when numbers of conveyances are going the same way for them to form a very long procession, there is not much need for a crack whip. A trille is rarely seen. It carries four persons, and is more or less like a small English barouche. The way in which the driver manages to stow his person away in a luggage-crowded vehicle is one of the wonders of Norway.

Unconscious Sarcasm.

A clergyman famous for his begging abilities was once catechising a Sunday school. When comparing himself—the pastor of a church—to a shepherd and his congregation to the sheep, he put the following question to the children:

"What does the shepherd do for the sheep?"

To the amusement of those present a small boy in the front row piped out:

"Shears them!"

In his will Mr. Samuel Beckett Chadwick, J. P., of Kingsley, Cheshire, England, bequeaths ten shillings per week for the maintenance of his horse Belshazzar, and directs that he shall not be worked after his master's death, and to his dog Grip he bequeathes the sum of five shillings per week for maintenance.

Grip may be considered a "lucky dog," for he ought to be able to live well on his legacy, for a dog's range of diet is so much greater than a horse's.

BEETS WORTH MILLIONS.

The Prolific Vegetable Has Become an Important Industrial Factor.

The beet is not the humble vegetable that most people consider it. The sugar beet especially is an important factor in American industries to which agriculture is allied. Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, has invested over $2,000,000 in beet sugar refineries. One factory alone consumes 3,000 tons of beets every day. Sugar is one of the most important foods consumed by people of high civilization. In this country 2,000,000 tons of sugar are consumed annually. America will soon lead the world in the production of sugar-producing beets.

Much of the sugar used in the great fruit and condensed milk industries of the country is now imported, owing to an insufficiency of the home supply. To give us the necessary 2,000,000 tons of sugar every year, 1,333,333 acres of beet-producing land is required, which should yield an average of 3,000 pounds of sugar to an acre. California is now the center of the sugar beet industry.

There is more profit to the acre for the farmer who invests in sugar beets than in the finest wheat. At twenty bushels per acre and 75 cents per bushel, the farmer receives but $15 per acre for his wheat crop, while at $50 per acre for beets, one acre of them will yield three times as much.—New York World.

Met the Wrong Man.

A fine-looking man with a gray beard and wearing a large Quaker hat walked serenely down Broadway recently and when near the Astor House he was accosted by a dapper fellow, clad in loud striped trousers.

"Why, how do you do, Uncle Josh Simpson?"

The Quaker beamed placidly upon the man who knew him so well, but whose indurated countenance he had never seen before. The confidence man, for such he was, was shaking the hand of the Quaker effusively, when the latter with a queer twinkle in his eyes, replied:

"Oh, I do not have so many, but they are harder."

The swindler, nothing daunted, continued: "Let me see; I met you somewhere, Uncle Josh, but I cannot recall the place?"

"I remember seeing you before," the Quaker said.

"Yes, yes; but where was it?"

With that same merry look from his eyes the old man said: "I visited Blackwell's Island some months ago to investigate some case I had and I saw you there in a convict's garb. If not, I am sure I will soon see you there."

"You are not an easy mark, old fellow," remarked the would-be swindler as he walked away. The Quaker was Thomas Lawrence, a lawyer and a member of the Society of Friends, who resides up the Hudson. He is also a writer and is the author of a story entitled, "The Indian Raid on South Mountain." His humor and originality are known in this city and Virginia, where he once lived.—New York Advertiser.

Vessel Captured by Ants.

When a vessel recently arrived in Liverpool with a cargo of logwood, everybody on board, from captain down to cook, rushed frantically ashore, as though pursued by some unseen enemy. As a matter of fact, the vessel was literally swarming with hordes of hungry Jamaica ants.

The little pests had invaded the lockers and dived headlong into the sugar barrels. After finishing the contents of these, they proceeded to bore holes through the supply of hard tack, and ate everything before them, until it was feared that the stock of provisions on board would run short. There was a cessation from their attacks when the vessel was caught in a West India hurricane, which flooded the cabin and drenched everything below. It was supposed that the intruders had all been drowned, but after the storm had passed away they began again with renewed energy.

The captain who commands the vessel stated that there are millions of the insects still on board, and he thought that the cargo must have come from the vicinity of ant hills for which Jamaica is noted. He stated that the ants were in all parts of the vessel, and that in all his experience at sea he had never before met with an attack like the newcomers waged against him.—London Answers.

As They All Do.

"Oh, the groom gave himself away. Asked her at the very first dinner at the hotel if she took cream and sugar in her coffee."—Indianapolis Journal.

Stan Away with the Spoon.

"Gimme a half sandwich and a cup of coffee!" yelled an excited customer, who dashed into a South Thirteenth street lunch house at 1:18 yesterday morning, as he laid 10 cents on the counter and nervously glanced at his watch. "Hurry up, for I want to make the 1:20 night car up Thirteenth." As he planted himself on the nearest stool the cry of "wheat bread ham—draw one!" was passed along a line of waiters to the kitchen below, and in one minute the order was served.

The customer had absorbed half the sandwich when the ringing of the trolley car gong was heard outside, but the coffee was still too hot to drink. Without pausing to reflect he jammed the remainder of the sandwich in his coat pocket, and grabbing the coffee cup rushed for the street, reaching it just in time to hop on the car.

Then he stood on the step and finished the coffee, while the cashier of the restaurant, who had just recovered from his astonishment, ran after the car, yelling: "The spoon! The spoon! Bring back that spoon!" Three policemen, two cab drivers and a dozen other customers joined in the chase and had almost overtaken the car when the man threw the spoon out into the street.

He was going to follow suit with the cup, but the cashier shouted to him to bring it back some other time. Spoon and cup together were worth about 13½ cents.—Philadelphia Record.

Cannibal Island Currency.

Curious moneys are used in the Cannibal Islands. The inhabitants of Santa Cruz use for money rope ends an inch thick and ornamented with scarlet feathers which are worn about the waist. The money of Solomon Island consists of shells about the size of shirt buttons. They are threaded on strings about four yards long and distinguished as red and white money. Dog teeth are of higher value and are worn on strings about the neck. Marble rings are considered valuable money. The currency table in these islands would be about as follows:

Ten cocoanuts equal one string of white money.

Ten strings of white money equal one dog's tooth.

Ten strings of dog's teeth equal one isa or fifty dolphin's teeth.

Ten isa equal one fine woman.

One marble ring equals one head of head-antlers, or one good hog, or one useful young man.

The Caretaker.

Caretaker is a word adopted into modern use and means one who takes care of, and is very generally applied to those employed to take care of things committed to their keeping. The way some people have of taking care of themselves is very suggestive of the need of a caretaker. The human body to such is a mansion filled with precious things uncared for, where thieves may break in and rust doth corrupt. Pains and aches are thieves, and the body left uncared for to their spoliage will be robbed of all its comforts and despoiled of its peace of mind and happiness. It is a happy thought to look upon St. Jacobs Oil as a caretaker, to employ it as a watchman against such intruders. There is hardly an ache, from a toothache to a toeache, that it can't take care of and effect a cure, and pains the most violent are conquered by its use. Its office as a caretaker is to prevent the spread of aches and pains into a chronic stage. Keep a bottle of it in the handiest place and be assured of good care and comfort.

Clung to the Old Style.

There has recently died in the east end of London an old gentleman (a centenarian) who is locally reported to be the last person in England to wear that curious fashion of headdress common in George III.'s time, a "pig tail." With his queer little queue of white hair, neatly tied behind with a knot of blue ribbon, his corded knee breeches and low buckle shoes, a large flowered waistcoat down to his hips and plum-colored open coat that showed the big frilled skirt and tight stock, the old man was quite a picturesque feature amid rather squalid surroundings. He had been considered quite a dandy in his youth, and the new fashions were none of them so smart as when he played the lady killer "about Boney's time."

He was very vain of his tail, and often prided himself, in his weak, quavering voice, of being "the only gentleman left that was dressed as a real gentleman should be." — Pearson's Weekly.

To Prepare Beef a la Mode.

For beef a la mode purchase six pounds of beef from the round, lard it thickly, pulling the lardoons directly through the beef. Mix a teaspoonful of ginger, half a teaspoonful of cloves a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a quarter of a teaspoonful each of mace and pepper and rub thoroughly into the beef. Moisten the beef with four tablespoonfuls of vinegar and stand it aside over night. Four hours before serving-time put into the bottom of your brazing pan—a double pan—one onion, one carrot, half a teaspoonful of celery seed, four bay leaves, four cloves of garlic. Put the beef on top, partly cover with stock, cover the pan, cook in the oven for four hours, basting every twenty minutes. Salt may be added when the meat is partly cooked.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in Ladies' Home Journal.

What Dr. Rauwolf Did.

Coffee is said to have been introduced into Europe by Dr. A. Rauwolf, a German physician, about the middle of the sixteenth century. He got it from Arabia, after it had passed into that country from Abyssinia. It is a pity, for coffee is one of those seductive stimulants which do harm under the disguise of seeming to do temporary good. It is a nerve poison on the same principle that alcohol is, and opium. Hence the public are to be congratulated on the prospect of the new food drink, Grain-O, taking its place. The latter is prepared from pure grains, is nourishing, sustaining and healthful, and never affects the nerves. Those who have tried Grain-O say nothing can induce them to resume the use of coffee. Good for children as for adults. Cost, one-fourth that of coffee. Packages 15c. and 25c. Ask your grocer for it.

THE NEIGHBORS.

Were Highly Entertained by Mr. and Mrs. John Houston Christmas.

The pleasant farm home of Mr. and Mrs John Houston in south Jackson township was the scene Christmas of a merry gathering of neighbors and friends who were invited in by the host and hostess to partake of a Christmas dinner. About fifteen families were present and with all of the the children, the company numbered over sixty. But all were royally entertained. At the proper time dinner was served and the elaborateness of the spred we are unable to describe. It conisted chiefly of goose, turkey, chicken, cold ham, tomatoes, cauliflower, celery, pickles, spices, cheese, biscuits and butter, jellies, pies, cakes, cookies, peaches, nuts, candy, tea, coffee, milk, etc, etc. Then following the meal came cigars for the gents, and a generous supply of candy, nuts and pop corn, for all. The COURIER reporter and wife esteem it a great favor to enjoy such a dinner with these old neighbors and friends. We happened to have our camera with us and the entire company were photographed, there being in the group fifty-eight faces. We hope Mr. and Mrs. Houston may live to enjoy many Christmas gatherings Their hospitalities on this occasion will never be forgotten.

Among those whose names we could learn were Wm, Kruse and family and mother. Geo. Rineholt and family, Ed. Myers and family, Thos McNamyre and family, P. P. Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Stockholders of the First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana, will be held on THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1898.

At the banking house of said bank in Auburn, Indiana, between hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m., of said day, for the purpose of electing seven (7) directors to serve for the ensuing year, and to transact such other business as may regularly come before such meeting.

CHARLES MCCLELLAN,
Cashier.

—There was a Christmas reunion at Clarence Raut's including M. and Mrs. McQuiston, of Logansport, and Mr. and Mrs. Mahurin, of Fort Wayne, and the relatives here.

—Frank Boyer and wife came up from Muncie to attend the McDowell reunion here, which proved a lovely family meeting. Mr. and Mrs. B. went to Kendallville today, to have a reunion of his relatives.

—Mrs C. V. Hydre left Friday to visit with her daughter, Mrs. J. H. Black, of Bushville, O., and her son H. W. Hedge of Fostoria, O.

—Ella Warstler and James Farver both of Jackson township married the COURIER out in good shape today.

—Dr. Vesta Swarts reports a girl baby born to Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Carmer, east of town this morning.

—Quite a number of Ft. Wayne relatives of the late Phillip Harter, including his aged widow came up with the remains on the noon train. The Oddfellows and many citizens were waiting to meet them and accompany them to Woodlawn.

—Still Duck wishes to thank the employes of the Boat Factory who so kindly remembered him on Christmas. My hearty thanks, boys.

THE FIRST WHEAT DEAL

It Was by Joseph as This One is by Joseph Leiter.

The oldest wheat deal on record is that told in the Bible in Genesis XLI and it really has some features like the present great wheat deal in Chicago. There is even a similarity in the names. Joseph Leiter; of Chicago, is the leader in this present wheat deal and has bought up all the wheat he could get, amounting at the present time to nearly 6 millions of bushels. In a similar way, Joseph of the Bible days, bought up all the wheat he could get hold of from all surrounding countries. He knew there would be a famine, and he was getting fixed for it and as he controlled the wealth of Egypt he was as well fixed fanancially, as Joseph Leiter is, who has the use of his father's 10 millions of cash. The first Joseph operated about 3000 years ago. It will be noticed that they called wheat "corn," but it was the same kind of grain we call wheat. Some grain of it have been found perserved and alive, and have been grown by us, which the Egyptians had carelessly left in the dry vaults or burial clothes with their mummies more than 5000 years ago. What we call corn, or Indian Maize, was not known in the world till after the discovery of America. But to return to the ancient Joseph's big wheat deal. It can be best understood by reading it in the Bible, to show how nearly it resembled the present deal of Joe Leiter. We quote three verses as follows:

48. And he gathered up all the food of the seven years, which in the land of Egypt, and laid up the food in the cities; the food of the field, which was round about every city, laid he up in the same.

49. And Josepeh gathered corn (wheat) as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering; for it was without number.

50. And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph for to buy corn (wheat); because that the famine was so sore in all lands.

THE COLISEUM BURNED.

It will be read with a pang of regret by the many who saw this great building in all its glory, at the last national democratic convention as well as at other great gatherings, that it is now a mass of ruins. It caught fire Friday while a big exposition of the Illinois Manufacturers was going on. Several lives were lost and a good deal of property on exhibition, besides the building itself. The following description of the great building will be of interest.

The coliseum cost $250,000 and was twice as large as the Madison Square Garden building of New York. It had a floor space of seven acres, was 770 feet long by 300 feet wide and contained 1,250 tons of steel, 1,200,000 feet of timber and 3,000,000 bricks. This building was opened to the public June 1, 1896. It had fourteen arches, seventy feet at the apex above the ground, and a span of 230 feet clear. It was encircled inside by a gallery 35 feet wide and 33 feet above the floor. The arena was only equaled in extent by that of the Roman coliseum. The building was insured for $120,000 in twenty-six different companies.

GUILTY OF CONTEMPT

But it Was a Moot Court and the Accused is Still Breathing The Air of Freedom

Attorney Price D. West, was somewhat taken aback, on Friday afternoon, to be suddenly arrested by Deputy Sheriff Platter, and have a formidable document like the following thrust into his face.

INDICTMENT.

THE STATE OF INDIANA,
VS
PRICE D. WEST.

The Grand Jury of the County of DeKalb, upon their oath do present: That Price D. West on the 24th day of December, in the year 1897, at the County of DeKalb, in the State of Indiana, did knowingly feloniously and with premeditated malice, contemptuously designing conceal and cover up the same, appear, present himself and be, within the court room of the DeKalb Circuit Court, and before the Judge thereof and did then and there in the presence of said court, and the attorneys and counselors at law then and there being, after being regularly charged with the fact matrimony on the evening previous, to-wit, on the 23d day of December A. D. 1897, and after publicly acknowledging the said accusation to be true, did willfully, knowingly, and with malice aforethought, refuse, neglect and omit to set up, donate, present or bestow the cigars or a cigar, upon, at or to anyone of said attorneys or upon said Judge of said court, to the great disgust and scandal of said court and bar and in contempt of the same, and contrary to the peace and dignity of said court, bar and the state of Indiana.

J. E. POMEROY,
Deputy Prosecuting Attorney.

This "true bill" was supposed to be authenticated, by Adam Husselman, foreman of the grand jury and filed by Clerk Long. It had been drawn by D. A. Garwood, acting as prosecutor. The witnesses for the state were, John W. Baxter, D. M. Link, C. M. Brown, A. J. Baxter, F. L. Welsheimer, D. A. Garwood, M. F. Long and J. E. Pomeroy.

A special court was organized in the consulting room with J. E. Rose as judge, D. A. Garwood as prosecutor and F. L. Welsheimer for the defense. The prisoner was brought in in charge of Mr. Platter, and duly arraigned. He plead guilty to the charge, and the judge sentenced him to pay a heavy fine in cigars, and to remain in charge of the sheriff till the fine was paid. The defendant did not like to appear on the streets in charge of an officer, and so used the telephone. E. M. Bishop soon produced a box of fine cigars, when the astonishing fact, appeared that less than half of those present were smokers. This count, of course included Miss Long, her father's deputy. So a new tack was resorted to. Part of the cigars were sold, and Clerk Long and Charley Crew, went to Hebel's and got a stock of candy and apples. When these were divided properly the "court stood adjourned to such time as D. M. Link, the only unmarried member of the DeKalb bar, shall be guilty of a similar offense."

Several other members of the bar were present, including J. H. Rose C. E. Emanuel, R. D. Tefft, G. M. Henderson, the court reporter, and Charlie Crew, the bailiff.

And all voted Judge Rose's court a success and wished for "many returns of the same."

And when they had laughed some more, they went out.

PHILIP HARTER

Will Be Interred Here Tomorrow Beside His Son, W. P.

Philip Harter, died at Fort Wayne Saturday morning, from paralysis. He was the father of the late W. P. Harter and his remaines will be shipped here tomorrow, arriving at 12:29 over the Lake Shore and will be interred beside his son in Woodlawn Cemetery. The deceased was born in Stark County O., and was seventy years of age. He has lived in Fort Wayne almost a half century. And many years ago he was employed as a clerk at DeWald's store, leaving there to take a similar position with Root & Co. Some years ago he returned to DeWald's where he remained until shortly before his sickness. Mr. Harter was a member and officer in the Wayne-st M. E. church. He leaves a widow, but no children, his only son having died as above mentioned.

TOOK A LIFE TIME.

But Was Amply Rewarded—The Knowledge Acquired Graciously

DEDICATED TO HUMANITY.

Many years ago Dr. Wheeler, then a young man with keen perception of physical needs, noted the lack of knowledge in the treatment of nerves, and through them the entire system. He determined to devote his life and direct his efforts to the study and treatment of that mysterious and subtle structure. He followed his determination well and successfully, and as a result the world is endowed with a remedy, Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer, which is a specific for all nervous troubles. It remained for Dr. Wheeler to present and develop the fact that disease is a result of a debilitated nerve system; that strong nerves make health. Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is, beyond all doubt, the true remedy for sick nerves. W. A. Emmons, Pettysville, Ohio, endorses this statement. He says:

"Last summer I was stricken with sleeplessness and nervous prostration. I could get no relief, and was growing worse when Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer was recommended. The first bottle helped me and the third one restored me to perfect health. During my sickness I lost 20 pounds, which I soon regained after the use of this valuable medicine."

Dr. Wheeler's Nerve Vitalizer is not an experimental compound, neither is its virtue confined to the treatment of special sets of nerves, but through the entire nervous system, restoring strength to all the vital organs.

STATE EXAMINER.

It is becoming impressed on thinking people, that we do not need a state bank examiner as much as we do a state officer whose duty it shall be to examine the books and methods in various county offices. If we had had such a man for the past twenty years, this county would have been saved a much larger sum of money, than that represented by even the now exposed forgeries. It is due to Mr. Ernst, that he is one of the first who has thought of and urged this matter on the public. His work for the past year or two has taken him through the books of many county officers and in many different counties, and he has come to the conclusion, that the trouble is not altogether in dishonest officials, but in bad business methods and loose habits as to book keeping. The U. S. treasury department insists on having a number of examiners going through each state to examine the condition, item by item, of every National Bank. The several states also have their own bank examiner who goes over the state examining all the other banks not under the National banking laws. But these institutions both National and private are a thousand times better kept and better managed, than the average county office. So it will be seen that we need some sort of supervision. Then, too in case of a bank, only a limited number of persons can be interested, but in a county office, every man within the borders of the county is interested. A loss to the county, is each man's loss, and a gain to the county is each man's gain who lives within the borders of the county, or who owns property in it But, the objectors will say: This would create a new office. That is true, but there would be only one in the state, and it would not cost each county to exceed $50, probably $30 would be nearer the figure. This sums is ridiculous in its smallness, compared to what almost every county is losing now, by bad methods of doing business or keeping books. The county officers themselves, could well afford to pay the expense. Had D. D. Moody kept his books properly and conducted his work according to business methods he would not now be in trouble. And those who made fraudulent orders, would hardly have got started on their career of crime, before they would have been checked. The chances are, they would never have begun their crooked work had they known there was a man watching them. But whether this new office is ever created or not, it is worth our while to begin taking the idea into earnest consideration.

Consumption

Will SCOTT'S EMULSION cure consumption? Yes and no. Will it cure every case? No. What cases will it cure then? Those in their earlier stages, especially in young people. We make no exaggerated claims, but we have positive evidence that the early use of

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda in these cases results in a positive cure to a large number. In advanced cases, however, where a cure is impossible, this well-known remedy should be relied upon to prolong life surprisingly.

WEST--BARNES.

Another Nuptial Knot Solemnized by Rev. Brosy.

There was a quiet and sensible wedding last evening, at the residence of P. D West on West Fourth-st, Rev J. D. Brosy at 5:30 united in marriage Mr. West and Mrs. Mary Barns, both are well known and popular citizen of Auburn. Mrs. Barnes, now Mrs. West, was formerly a resident of Toledo, but has been in Auburn several years, and had made here a large circle of warm friends. Mr. West is also well known, having lived all his life in this county, and for several years has been in the practice of law in Auburn. An elegant lunch followed the ceremony. Their many friends will unite with the COURIER in wishing them a long life of perfect happiness.

BIG LAWSUIT

Certified In The Allen Co. Court From DeKalb Yesterday.

(Port Wayne Journal)

The important case of Philo J. Lockwood against Lyman Lockwood and Addison B. Nickey was certified here from DeKalb County yesterday. The plaintiff charges that Lyman Lockwood purchased timber land from him for the sum of $14,000. He paid $4000, giving notes for the balance, $10,000. Before this sum was paid he sold the land to Mr. Nickey and neglected to pay the plaintiff, Philo J. Lockwood, who now seeks to recover the money from Lockwood and Nickey. McClellan & Garwood, L. M. Ninde & Sons and W. L. Penfield are attorneys for the plaintiff.

BLADDER TROUBLES

The bladder was created for one purpose, namely, a receptacle for the urine, and as such it is not liable to any form of disease except by one of two ways. The first way is from imperfection of the kidneys. The second way from careless local treatment of other diseases.

SAMPLE SENT FREE.

Unhealthy urine from unhealthy kidneys is the chief cause of bladder troubles It is comforting to know that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root fulfills every wish in quickly curing bladder and urinary troubles. It corrects frequent calls, inability to hold urine and scalding or stinging pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to get up many times during the night to urinate. The mild and extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases If you need a medicine you should have the best. At druggists, fifty cents and one dollar. You may have a sample bottle and pamphlet, both sent free by mail. Mention Auburn COURIER and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. The proprietors of this paper guarantee the genuineness of this offer.

DEKALB.

Adam McKinley of LaOtto was here last week.

Miles Embrey and Geo. Wygandt went to Fort Wayne last week.

Mr. Pember went to Angola, Saturday to visit his children and friends.

The boys bought a ferret Saturday and took it on a rabbit hunt. They got fifteen rabbits and lost the ferret.

The Christmas tree at Butler Center was well attended and all had a good time.

Samuel Hippenhammer of Ft. Wayne is visiting his brother Edward and other friends here.

Mrs. Knepper moved into Adam McKinley's house at St. John last week.

Bon Grim of Huntertown, Ed. Treesh of LaOtto and Johnny Moody, gave H. P. Housel a Christmas visit and had a good time.

Some reckless hunters shot one of Elmer Haynes' sheep while hunting last week. Boys should be careful when the farmers are kind enough to let them hunt on their farms.

Frank Kemery will trim the Dispatch reporter's wheels for him if he writes any more about his going to see his girl at church, and she tells him. I guess sit."

Sam Ballentine must have walked home alone from church the other night as he was able to repeat the text.

NOTICE.

All persons now indebted to the Clerk's Office on account of fees taxed by D. D. Moody, ex-clerk, are hereby notified to pay, call or send the amount to M. F. Long, clerk, and the same will be properly receipted on the Fee Books in this office at Auburn.

If the amount due is not paid by the first day of February, 1898, fee bills will be ordered to issue and additional costs will be made.

The money is needed to pay claims against the office and must be had.

BUTLER.

Uncle John Crouse is again confined to his home by serious illness.

The Christian Church people have discontinued the revival effort. They had a measure of success.

Mr. Simmons young son, of Minneapolis is making a short visit with Butler friends.

Mrs. Sarah Repp of Glenn, Mich., is spending the holidays with her brother, J. A. Campbell and other relatives.

Mrs. Oviatt Campbell is visiting with friends in Elkhart.

Several cases of diphtheria are reported in the vicinity and one death, that of Geo. Blaker's little daughter.

The writer made a hurried trip to the State Capital on last Friday, the Wabash train being late, a whole day was consumed in the passage of the distance of 158 miles. The delay enabled me to take a turn around Peru. I met Skimmer formerly of Butler, the victim of a recent half holdup. It is reported that he was induced to charter a special train at an expense of $100 to carry a bank robber to Walkerton, and received a forged check in payment, and enabled the robber to escape arrest. Also met Edson, formerly of Butler. Two of Butler's up-to date school marams. Miss Cornelius, of Troy, and Miss Bryant, of Butler, were fellow passengers and enjoyed the sights of Peru with myself There seemed to have been more snow down there than at Butler, and better sleighing. We got to the city, at 6:25, and may speak of my visit there later on.

THE GREATEST DISCOVERY YET.

W. M. Repine, editor Tiskilwa, Ill., "Chief," says: "We won't keep house without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Experimented with many others, but never got the true remedy until we used Dr. King's New Discovery. No other remedy can take its place in our home, as in it we have a certain and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, etc." It is idle to experiment with other remedies, even if they are urged on you as just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery. They are not as good, because this remedy has a record of cures and besides is guaranteed. It never fails to satisfy. Trial bottles free at H. B. McCord's drugstore.

—A favorite remedy for many of the ills of this life is Simmons Liver Regulator, the most popular medicine yet discovered. It is a searching cleanser, and by its action frees the system of all impurities, producing a sound, healthy liver. It is the standard household remedy for liver and stomach troubles, and has the unqualified endorsement of thousands of our best citizens throughout the country. Having been before the people for many yeart, its long and honorable career is a sufficient guarantee of purity and reliability. Simmons Liver Regulator is manufactured by J. H. Zeilin & Co., and is readily distinguished by the red Z on each package.
